A cold weather trip to India may now be regarded—as the long list of illustrious visitors whom we may expect in Bombay next month reminds us—as quite an ordinary way of spending a six months' holiday, and it seems that the time is approaching when it will be considered, as Lord Rosebery lately remarked, that no English statesman's political education is complete without a visit to the East. Before the Suez Canal was opened, Englishmen who came to India merely to see it, and not to earn their livelihood as soldiers, civilians, and merchants, were few and far between. The first Englishman who came to India as a bond fide traveller was probably Tom Coryat, who arrived at Surat in December, 1617, after his walk of 3,000 miles from Scanderoon, and died there without committing to writing the strange tale of his wanderings. Since his time until of late years India seems to have been regarded as beyond the sphere of the English traveller, who was ready to make expeditions to Palestine, to Egypt, or to America, but shrank from crossing the Indian Ocean. All this is now changed, and a visit to India bids fair to become to the modern Englishman what the grand tour of Europe was to the young man of fortune a hundred years ago.

But the chief cause that has led to the yearly influx of cold weather visitors is the shortening and cheapening of the journey modern Englishman what the grand tour of Europe was to the young man of fortune a hundred years ago.

But the chief cause that has led to the yearly influx of cold weather visitors is the shortening and cheapening of the journey between Europe and India, together with the extension of our railway system, which makes the most interesting cities of the interior easily accessible. It was very different fifty years ago, when any traveller proposing to visit India had either to spend five months sailing round by the Cape, or else, if he preferred the overland route, even then took two months on his journey and five months sailing round by the Cape, or else, if he preferred the overland route, even then took two months on his journey and had to pay close upon £150 for his expenses by land and sea. Anyone who wants to know what travelling was like in the old days may satisfy his curiosity by reading in the pages of our Bombay archeologist what the passengers got for their £4 a day on board the Berenice, an Indian Navy steamer of 664 tons. "There is neither ice nor soda-water on board. When you want tea you must apply to the captain or the surgeon. Food there is in abundance, but mostly uneatable. Permission is given to sleep on the benches, or the table in the cuddy, for an extra payment of Rs. 200, but as the servants are all littered under them during the night, that settles the question, and you retire to your den in disgust. . . . The breakfast bell comes, and the inevitable ham and eggs for twenty-six passengers—in one plate—makes its appearance at the door, and simultaneously—for the saloon is also the dressing-room—there is a hurry-scurry, clearing away, combs, wet towels, dirty linen, hair brushes, and soap suds. You may fill in between each of the lines—cockroaches. If you complain you are told to be thankful, and that the Berenice is a perfect paradise compared with the Zenobia in the same service, which used to carry pigs-from Waterford to Bristol." As it is the poet's crown of sorrow to remember happier things, it ought to be a source of joyful congratulation for those who voyage in such splendid ships as the Rome and the Carthage to think of the unhappy lot of their predecessors by the overland route. The above description is abbreviated from the account given by a lady of her voyage from Suez to Bombay in 1839. Since then, however, things have gradually and steadily improved under the auspices of the P. and O. Company and the other lines, whose energetic competition prevents the public from suffering the evils of a monopoly. Thus it is that to say how many times more comfortable than it used to be.

Finally, when our traveller arrives on the shores of India, he now finds every convenience of modern travel to carry him swiftly to his destination and make him comfortable on the way: and, if he is distrustful of his own capabilities of arranging his route, he can put himself under the direction of Messrs. Cook and Co. There is still, no doubt, room for improvement from a traveller's point of view, especially in the matter of hotels. A writer in the Graphic some time ago remarked that "if people would but close their eyes, and by some exercise of the imagination think of the Arabian Nights' Tales and the hostelrics of the Riviera in con-

a voyage to India is more than twice as cheap, and it is impossible junction, they might find no bad picture in their mind's eye of what an Indian hotel of the first class is really like." If this what an indian notes of the first class is really like. It this couleur de rose description is true, then all we can say is that we have never seen an Indian hotel of the first class, and that we have a shrewd suspicion that it exists nowhere but in the cloudland of the writer's own exuberant imagination. Count Gubernatis certainly gives small encouragement agination. Count Gubernatis certainly gives small encouragement to this writer's view of the matter. Most people will be more inclined to agree with him, when he points his antithesis by glancing at the other side of the picture and declaring "that as to Indian hotels of the second class there are no words in Billingsgate strong enough to describe them." Somewhere between these two extremes lies the average Indian hostelry. It has neither the luxurious appointments of a London or Parisian hotel, nor the homely comfort of old-fashioned English provincial inns. Its rooms are small and ill-furnished. The glassware is coarse and thick, the spoons and forks are too often in need of electro-plating, and the hot-water plates are disfigured by cracks and chips. The thick, the spoons and forks are too often in need of electro-plating, and the hot water plates are disfigured by cracks and chips. The bills of fare for breakfast, tiffin, and dinner are horribly monotonous, and the items of which they are composed are too substantial, and not cooked with the care required to tempt the palate in a hot climate. But, on the other hand, the bedrooms are generally open to all the fresh breezes of heaven, the dinner table is well-fanned by the artificial air of the punkah, ice can be got in abundance, and, if luxury is absent, at any rate the charges are moderate. The last mentioned consideration is important for travellers who are not provided with the purse of Fortunatus, and are therefore willing to dispense with luxury, if they are by its absence enabled to spend a longer time on their travels. And it is for such travellers in India that hotels are mainly intended. Illustrious visitors of great wealth, like Lord Rosebery, Lord Hartington, and Mr. Goschen, have little occasion to trouble the hotels, as the doors of Government House are thrown wide open to them wherever they go.

THE P. AND O. CONTRACT. (Delhi Gazette.)

There are probably few Anglo-Indians that are not glad the P. and O. have succeeded in renewing their contract for the mail service for another ten years. Guis Seperabit still holds good as regards the connection between Her Majesty's Post Office and the enterprising speculators that have succeeded in reducing the distance between England and India from seventeen weeks to as many days.

We are told that the subsidy has been reduced by nearly £100,000 per annum. This is a material saving, and should make itself felt in a reduction of the rates of overland postage. Four and a-half annas is far too much to pay in an age make itself felt in a reduction of the rates of overland postage. Four and a-half annas is far too much to pay in an age where everybody has learned to write overland letters, even to the dais who accompany Anglo-Indian ladies in their travels to Europe! In these days of short service Tommy Atkins leaves nis sweetheart at home, and it will certainly help to make him a better soldier if he has the opportunity of writing to her as often as possible, and at as small a cost as possible. The course of true love certainly does not run smooth when the postage of a single letter costs a day's earnings. There are two ways of cementing the union between England and India—rapidity of communication and economy. The first is a luxury that principally benefits the rich; the second a boon that blesses the poor. In that respect we think the English Post Office has acted wisely in reducing the suboidy to the P. and O., always supposing that India will get the benefit of reduced overland postage. It will be her own fault if she does not. In these days nothing is to be lost by asking—nay, agitating for what is wanted—and a three anna rate of postage on overland letters is just the thing for India. Increased vitality to every branch of business will follow the reduction, and the Post-office itself will be the gainer in the end. As a reduction of a day in transit is also promised Bombay may expect her mail every Monday morning. This is practically the best arrangement that could be made—the delivery of letters on Sunday would turn that into the busiest day in the week. Altogether the terms of the new contract are not bad ones.

ON THE EXTINCTION OF THE RUPEE. (Pioneer.)

"Once did she hold the gorgeous East in fee," And was the darling of the West: (the worth Of Silver had not sunk beneath her birth, Silver, the mother of the bright Rupee.) She was a maiden, fair at "two-and-three," But guile nor force could fix her at that rate And when at last she fell to "one-and-eight,"
Then "one-and-six," we knew how it must be:
And now that we have seen her figure fade
To "one-and-four"—(at which she tried to stay)—
And yet must tribute of a tax be paid
On incomes crippled to our dying day,—
Men are we, and must swear when e'en the shade
Of what was all too small has passed away.—A. H. L.

LORD ULICK BROWNE. (Englishman.)

The Covenanted Service loses one of its oldest and most honoured members in the person of Lord Ulick Browne, who nonoured memoers in the person of Lord Ulick Browne, who retires to-day under the inexorable thirty-five years' rule. His Indian career is replete with interest, and merits something more than a mere passing notice. He arrived at Calcutta in 1851; and served the usual apprenticeship as Assistant Magistrate in various Behar districts. But promotion in those good old days was far speedier than it is in our times, and the commencement of the annus mirabilis 1857 found him already mencement of the annus mirabius 1857 found him already officiating as Magistrate-Collector of Monghyr. Here the nerve of the young officer was severely tried, and was not found wanting. At the very outset of the mutiny the 5th Irregular Cavalry rose in rebellion, got rid of their Adjutant, Sir Norman Leslie, in the usual style, and entered the neighbouring district of the control of the control of their Adjutant, sir Norman Leslie, in the usual style, and entered the neighbouring district the control of the con Leslie, in the usual style, and entered the neighbouring district of Bhaugulpore. They were ripe for further mischief, and there was every reason to fear that they would loot the Government Treasury, murder the few European residents, and seriously hamper the all-important transit of troops up-country by river steamer. Lord Ulick suggested that a guard of fifty Europeans might be posted at both stations, but the proposal was vetoed by Government action on the opinion of Mr. Yule, then Divisional Commissioner. The wave of rebellion, however, spread to Segowlie, where the 12th Irregulars murdered their commandant, and scattered over the country unphagued. The European guard and scattered over the country unchaqued. The European guard was, therefore, supplied, and the mutineers of the 5th started for Delhi without molesting the residents of Bhaugulpore or Monghyr.

At one period, indeed, before the arrival of the guard, a panic occurred at the latter station, owing to the arrival of a party of troops proceeding northward, ostensibly on leave. But Lord Ulick Browne was equal to the occasion. His estafettes brought timely notice of the enemy's approach. The station was put into a position which defied attack by isolated parties, and the Magistrate sucwhich defied attack by isolated parties, and the Magistrate succeeded in allaying the public apprehension hy holding his Court as usual in defiance of wild rumours which circulated so freely. A few years later he showed that he possessed a degree of moral strength which is far more rarely to be met with than mere physical courage. While Magistrate of Nuddea, in 1866, famine stalked through the land, slaying its tens of thousands in Orissa and menacing the prosperity of Central Bengal. Lord Ulick did all that could be done to meet the crisis with the aid of voluntary subscriptions but he soon tound it necessary to appeal to Govern all that could be done to meet the crisis with the aid of voluntary subscriptions, but he soon found it necessary to appeal to Government for a subsidy. The reception accorded to this very modest demand must have recalled the experience of Oliver Twist when he asked for more. Lord Ulick was curtly told that nothing whatever would be given. He persisted, however, and a departmental inquiry followed, which led to a very considerable sum being placed at his disposal for the relief of the starving cultivators. Nor was this all; for the civil officers of Orissa and Chota Nagpore, where the need was far greater, took heart of grace from Lord Ulick's success, and made similar demands which it was found impossible to resist. His services at this serious crisis won recognition from a man who was by no means lavish of praise. Sir George Campbell, as President of the Famine Commission, wrote as follows:—"Lord Ulick Browne has no lack of mission, wrote as follows:—"Lord Ulick Browne has no lack of that official courage which we have found so sadly wanting in the Collectors of Orissa; in fact, it may be said that he possesses that quality in an eminent degree." During the course of the following year he was appointed Commissioner of the Chittagong Division, in which capacity he rendered yeoman service by his successful opposition to a proposal of the Board of Revenue, which would have repeated, with regard to the important estates known as the Noabad taluks, the gigantic blunder of 1793. By his advice, too, Government was induced to abandon the feeble and futile policy of subsidising the fierce Lushais, in order to check their constant raids. The punitive expedition which followed the change of system is a matter of history, and its result has more than borne out its promoter's anticipations.

After serving for six years as Commissioner of the Presidency

After serving for six years as Commissioner of the Presidency Division Lord Ulick became an officiating member of the Board of Revenue, but his constitution, never very strong, and impaired by hard work and heavy responsibilities, was unequal to the burden and heat of the plains, and he was appointed Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division, with headquarters at Darjeeling. In this capacity he again showed that he possessed the courage of his opinions. He consistently opposed what he believed to be the socialistic tendency of modern agrarian legislation, while he rem his opinions. He consistently opposed what he believed to be the socialistic tendency of modern agrarian legislation, while he rendered a loyal and implicit obedience to the policy of Government when once that policy had assumed a definite shape. It is, indeed, an open secret that his attitude as regards the first Rent Bill deprived him of the reversion to the Chief Commissionership of Assam. Sir Ashley Eden, who perpetrated a complete change of front as regards the Bengal land question, found it also convenient to alter his opinion with regard to Lord Ulick Browne's candidature, and withdrew the support which he had previously given.

In the relations of private life Lord Ulick Browne has succeeded in winning the hearts of all who have come in contact with him, and his hospitality will long be remembered at the head-quarters of his division. In his efforts to relieve the insipidity of Anglo-Indian existence, he possessed a most efficient helpmate in Lady Ulick Browne, whose departure last year was severely felt throughout the Darjeeling district. The feeling of general regret will be renewed on Lord Ulick's retirement, and the host of friends who have been drawn to him by his generous spirit and genuine kindliness will unite in wishing him Godspeed, and a long and happy life in the old country.

NATIVES IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE. (Madras Mail.)

A certain section of the Native Press of India, in discussing the chances of employment of their countrymen, in the present age of competition, in the various offices under the respective age of competition, in the various offices under the respective public administrations, have complained that the Hindu is losing his long recognised supremacy, in influence, in competition with Mahommedans. "Natives of the country," they contend, "are Hindus only; and they refuse to recognise the established fact that within that term is included other races, to establish the right of one of which to be so regarded the Anglo-Indian and Eurasian Association" has already done so much. The main complaint of the section of the Vernacular Press to which we allude is that these "Natives of the country," or Hindus, have not a fair share of the higher Government offices in the civil administration of the Lower Provinces. An examination of the administration of the Lower Provinces. An examination of the appointments, promotions and transfers, &c., announced in the appointments, promotions and transfers, etc., announced in the Calcutta Gazette of 23rd Sept. last, in nine out of the eleven departments under the Bengal Government, however, at once refutes the allegation. Of a total of 129 names published therein no less than 105 are of Hindus, 9 only of Mohamedans, 3 of Eurasians, and 18 of Europeans; and of 63 names of employés connected swith the well-paid Judicial Department, 60 are of Hindus, 2 only of Mohamedans, Eurasians nil, and of Europeans 1. These figures, certainly, do not add any force to the complaint, by the Vernacular Press, that the Government are not extending adequate or sufficient patronage to the Hindu classes; and had we before us a return of the number of the latter, as compared with Mahomedans and Eurasians, employed in the public offices at Calcutta alone, we think the Mohammedan and Eurasian communities would find if there be any complaint of want of patronage it lies with them alone. The Baboo of Bengal, from his early years of discrimination, sets his heart and mind upon Government employment; and M.A., B.A., or F.A., though he be, he would rather accept Rs. 30 as a writer in some public office than double the sum to forfeit, what he considers, the honour connected with his occupation. This mistakes of the part of the Nativas or Hindus of India has often hear idea on the part of the Natives or Hindus of India has often been denounced in public, and in the Press, by men of vast ability; and it is but a few years ago that the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, at a public meeting at Patcheappah's Hall, in this city, pointed out the advantages the Hindu youth would gain by preparing out the advantages the Hindu youth would gain by preparing himself for, and working up to, something more lucrative than mere quill-driving to a public office. Unfortunately, Mr. Mackenzie's words, like those of many other experienced men, have fallen upon deaf ears; at any rate, the Hindu community appear to have done little towards carrying out his admirable suggestion. A correspondent dealing with the complaints put forward by the Native Press a short time since, observed that probably, if a true statement of the relationship and family connections among Hindu officials could be obtained, some extraordinary disclosures would be made public; and that it would be found that appointments under Government were being constantly filled by relatives. ments under Government were being constantly filled by relatives, and connections of, and even dependents upon, certain Hindu families, to the almost entire exclusion of Mohammedans and Eurasians. The latter two classes, therefore, have every cause to complain, especially seeing that to the Hindus has ever been, and still is being, giving far more than their proportionate share of Government support. An examination of the appointments, transfers, &c., published in the official Gazette of the several Presidencies, must convince any one, who takes the trouble to inquire, that the Hindu population are well represented in the matter of appointments under Government, while such an examination also could not fail to convince the most sceptical upon the question, that the claims of Mohammedans and Eurasians been, and still are, but very little cared for, if even recognised at all. This appears to be a question worthy of discussion at the approaching celebration of the Anglo-Indian Association, considering the present death of employment for Eurasians in

A DEALER in ghee was fined Rs. 100 by the Hon. Syed Ameer Hoosein at the Calcutta Police Court on the 6th Oct. on a charge of selling adulterated ghee. The fine was the highest penalty provided under the new Act.

A TELEGRAM to a Calcutta paper reports that a fatal accident has occurred in South Sylhet, which has cast a great gloom over the district. Mr. William Prentice, manager of the Lanyani tea estate, is reported to have met his death by drowning. The deceased was a great favourite in the district, where he was known to every one.

THE Silchar correspondent of the Englishman telegraphs on the 5th Oct:—"On the death of the late Maharaja of Mavipur, it will be remembered that Chowhasingh claimed the throne and fought for it, but being defeated fled to Sylhet. He has now returned with a following of 400 men partly armed. On being stopped by the frontier police guard at the ferry-ghat outpost, they shot one of the guard and disarmed the rest, crossing into Manipur. They are now marching on Manipur. On information reaching Silchar on the same day (the 3rd), the frontier police, under Lieutenant Harris, of the 4th Native Infantry, left in chase of them.

The vastness of the Indian Empire is, a contemporary remarks, sometimes brought home to us in a startling way. Taking, for instance, the Sanitary Commissioner's account of Bengal during the last year we find it incidentally stated as a matter of no particular moment that in Orissa alone 15,000 persons must have perished (through the effects of the cyclone and storm wave of 1885), and that no record of their death has been kept. The chowkidars, who in the usual course of events should have "reported" the cyclone to the Government, were swept away with the villagers, and there was no one left to tell the tale. Again, cholera visited with more or less severity close upon 30,000 villages, causing 173,767 deaths. The mortality from fever was 1,042,142—an increase of nearly 300,000 as compared with the previous year. In all 1,500,000 deaths were registered in the previous year. In all 1,500,000 deaths were registered in the province, exclusive of the 15,000 who are "estimated" to have perished in Orissa. Against this stands a record of more than 1,600,000 deaths. The Laureate, as a civilian once pointed out to the author of the "Competition Wallah," has under-estimated the fecundity of our teeming world. In Bengal one man dies every twenty seconds of the year, and his place is taken by a baby and a fraction which amounts, roughly, to one-quarter of a baby.

MADRAS.

In reply to the Mahajana Sabha's memorial to the Madras Government, on the separation of Magisterial from Revenue functions, the Madras Government has communicated the following order to the President:—"The Government are conscious of the importance of the subject touched upon, and will consider the Sabha's suggestions upon a fitting occasion, but are not prepared to recommend to the Government of Indianny administrative changes which involve additional expenditure."

The appointment of an epigraphist for the Southern Presidency has given an opportunity to the Lahore paper for writing an amusing squib regarding the "Madras Scandals," the humour of which no doubt will be appreciated by others as well as the new epigraphist. Says the Lahore paper:—"The gentleman selected is an able scholar; and ought to be able to decipher some hitherto unintelligible inscriptions in that Presidency, dating apparently from some Roman invasion of Southern India. On the carved base, for instance, of a monstrous effigy of a curious quadruped with drooping head and flowing tail, the words, "Equus superannuatus a muliere emptus aptus processionibus fit—H. S. T." have long puzzled commentators. Again, a colossal group of some dimly-seen divinity, with two mortals of different stature below; the smaller of whom, labelled "Publicanus," the god pats on the back with one hand and at the same time kicks with its foot, while he frowns with apparent severity on the Faller mortal inscribed "Membrum Ligni Fiscalis." Those, however, who get round behind the groups, can see that the god is winking with one eye. The subscription underneath explains nothing:—"Scand: Mag: M. L. F. agros vendere impune potest. P. verbum super nomen subscretarinum Laftani deletionem rogare non potests." There are other interesting antiquities in the neighbourhood, one representing apparently a new version of the parable of the man who went down to Jericho and fell among thieves, and subsequently went through a series of disasters in pursuit of them: another varies the story of Esther, representing the energetic reformer Mordecai punished, while Haman, during the interregnum between Ahasuerus and his successor, occupies the throne. These would seem to show that the occurrences to which the meanorials refer belong to the Christian era, though, judging from interval evidence, this should be almost incredible. If, however, the new Epigraphist for Madras could succeed in translating into English,—that would be understood, say, by Member

A Government Gazette Extraordinary gives the particulars of the visit of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. It concludes as follows:—"Before taking his departure, his Royal Highness desired his Excellency the Governor to make publicly known his grateful sense and appreciation of the reception which has been given to her Royal Highness and himself, of the arrangements made for their comfort, and especially of the warm welcome which they have received from all classes during their stay in the Bombay Presidency. While his Royal Highness feels that there

NATIVE PRESS.

THE TIMES ON THE NATIVE CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA.

The Bombay Samachar says that, according to Reuter's telegram, the Times, in a leading article, deprecates the admission of Natives into the Indian Civil Service, and holds that it is necessary to govern India upon English and not Native principles and by English administrators. These remarks evidently appear to have been made with the intention of throwing an obstacle in the way of the proposed Native Civil Service Commission. Such an opinion as the Times has ventured to give is opposed to good an opinion as the Times has ventured to give is opposed to good sense and polity, and savours of selfishness and injustice. But no one is surprised at the action of the Times, particularly as the paper is said to have passes under the thumb and control of certain Anglo-Indians, who are by no means the friends and well-wishers of this country. The Times not only indulges in intemperate language against the Natives, but it is known in some instances to give purely imaginary and fictitious news concerning them. But the Times passes all bounds of immoderation and foolishness when it asserts that Natives ought not to be admitted into the Civil Service of India. The paper hopes that the officials both in England as well as in India, will disregard this most partial and wicked assertion on the part of the Times.

The Jame-Jamshed says that the "Thunderer" has made itself ridiculous by the assertion it has made against the admission of the Natives into the Civil Service. The "Thunderer" little knows that its world-wide reputation is being marred by its playing into the hands of some of those afflicted with "Hindophobia." Some of the best contributors on Indian affairs having severed their connection with the paper, it appears to have passed severed their connection with the paper, it appears to have passed entirely into the hands of one or two pensioned Anglo-Indians who were never friendly with the country and its inhabitants. Such effusions as have appeared in the Times are not likely to sway the minds of the Indian Government who have appointed the Commission.

THE Bombay Samachar is apprehensive that the leader appearing in the Times against the admission of Natives into the Civil Service is but the precursor of an inquiry into the question of excluding the Natives of India from the Civil Service. The coincidence of the proposed appointment of a Commission and the leader in the Times will engender suspicion in the minds of the Native public that the Commission has been appointed with a view to see if Natives could not be excluded from the Civil Service. The paper hopes that an assurance will be given by Government that the Commission is not appointed to consider a scheme of exclusion which naturally suggests itself to the public scheme of exclusion which naturally suggests itself to the public

LADY DUFFERIN'S FUND.—The Bharatbasi says:—As regards Lady Dufferin's Fund, we have to say that the manner in which females are being trained in medical science will do very little good to the country. If medical science is not properly taught it is likely to do harm, and it is impossible to impart good medical education by the female teachers employed by Lady Dufferin's Fund. Whatever amount of medical education a female may receive, she will by no means be so successful as male doctors People have on several occasions been put to trouble through calling in European female M.D.'s. Those who receive education from the degree-holding European females will be more dangerous than the quacks. Lady Dufferin's Fund will do no good beyond maintaining some European females.

THE CENTRAL ASIAN QUESTION.—The Bangabasi says:—War has really broken out in the plains of Central Asia. It is clearly understood why the Boundary Commission is flying away. The poor Amir will be in the front, and the English will be behind him. Under the advice of his English patrons, Amir Abdurrahman has become involved in a war with the people of Badakshan. A terrible war on the Kabul frontier will break out either between the Amir and the Russians, or the Russians and the English, and this will spread in the plains of Central Asia like fire. Let the Viceroy be careful. We do not know what is in store for us.

THE NEW LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF THE PUNJAB —The announcement that Sir Lepel Griffin will be appointed to succeed Sir Charles Aitchison as Lieut-Governor of the Punjab has been received with general satisfaction throughout the province, says the Journal of the Anjuman i-Punjab. The numerous friends of Sir Journal of the Anjuman i-Punjab. The numerous friends of Sir Lepel never entertained any doubt about his appointment, not withstanding the rumour that Sir Charles Bernard had been elected to succeed Sir Charles Aitchison, and it is a matter for satisfaction that the choice of Government has fallen on one who is fully qualified for the important appointment, and whose intimate knowledge and experience of the people are second to none in the service.

Lord Dufferin's Proposed Visit to Surat.—The Gujrat Mitra says that there are two questions to be considered with reference to the expected arrival at Surat of Lord Dufferin. The first question was whether a Viceroy, who has been so much spoken against by the public at large, should be received with due and proper decorum befitting his position, and the other was whether municipal money could be spent for that purpose. With regard to the first question, the paper thinks that Lord Dufferin was not coming to pay a visit to the city in his private capacity, but that as the representative of Her Majesty the Queen Empress, and he should be received as such. If he had signified his intention to visit the city in his private capacity, the paper, as representing the public, would not have recommended such a cordial reception as it would then be calculated "to treat a cow and a she-ass on the same level." With regard to the second question the paper is of opinion that municipal funds are intended for municipal and sanitary purposes, and they could not be utilised, unless the public at large agree to do so, for welcoming honoured guests in the city. If municipal money could not be spent for the purpose, the paper recommends that a fund be raised by general subscription. LORD DUFFERIN'S PROPOSED VISIT TO SUBAT.—The Gujrat

NOTICES BOOKS. OF

REMINISCENCES AND OPINIONS OF SIR FRANCIS HASTINGS DOYLE.*

A man who has "strutted on the stage of life" for more than seven decades should have something to tell the public, at least if his opportunities of observation have been such as to entitle him to give his experience to the world; but it by no means follows as a corollary that a septuagenarian is able to interest his hearers, and charm and amuse those who, the author being a persona incognita, can have no individual bonds of sympathy with the biographer. But Sir Francis Doyle acquits himself well of both these desiderata. His life, if not eventful, has, at any rate, been passed in the midst of numerous persons of distinction, with -nay, perhaps, with most of whom he has enjoyed an intimate acquaintance. He has, too, in common with all Irishmen, the happy knack of telling a tale so as to lend attraction to what is already attractive; and, lastly, he has an inexhaustible fund of anecdote.

To glace at even a small fraction of the tales and stories which Sir Francis Doyle has ransacked from the storehouse of a fertile brain and a trustworthy memory would fill page after page; and even in the end no good would ensue, as it is far preferable to read them "in the original," as told by the author, rather than to gather their import "second-hand" in a review. So we refrain the distribution of a program of the contract of the distribution of a program of the contract of the distribution of a program of the contract of the distribution of a program of the contract of the distribution of a page 200 memory and the contract of and confine ourselves to the sketches of character, which add an

First and foremost we find that Gladstone even as a stripling at College was a man of mark; his indomitable perseverance, his undaunted energy, his power of language and oratorical sweetness, singled him out for future greatness. He was then a High Tory and still Higher Churchman; now he is an advanced Radical, and—well reads the leasure at Hammadon to the delectric of and-well, reads the lessons at Hawarden to the delectation of

Herbert."

Sir Robert Peel is described as a Statesman who carefully prepared his speeches beforehand; so "he got weaker instead of stronger as he wenton, and had to put some fresh tea in, and fil up the teapot once or twice before the final distribution of which he had to give to the world." Sir James Graham was "heavy, not to say tiresome." Sheil had a voice which was "detestable, something between the yell of a peacock and the squeak of a slate-pencil, so that unmixed pleasure could not be enjoyed, and you were obliged to wait for the newspapers until next morning to understand how great he really was." Dr. Newman—the present Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster—when preaching, always began as if he had determined "to set forth his idea of the truth in the plainest and simplest language—language, as always began as it he had determined "to set forth his idea of the truth in the plainest and simplest language—language, as they say, 'intelligible to the meanest understanding.' But his ardent zeal and fine poetical imagination were not thus to be controlled. . . . In the end they were generally too strong for him, and poured themselves out in a torrent of eloquence all the more impetuous from having been so long repressed.' Of Dr. Puesey it is recorded that he was "a learned grand grand and have the more impetuous from having been so long repressed." Of Dr. Pusey it is recorded that he was "a learned man, no doubt, but dull and tedious as a preacher"—a bitter criticism due in some measure, as Sir Francis Doyle admits, to the fact that the Apostle of the High Church was wont to preach such long sermons that the listening Undergraduates were generally late for dinner! Macaulay, as a speaker, "hurried along too fast." "You may speak," says our author, "with the tongue of angels or archangels if you can, but unless your sentences are allowed to sink gradually into the minds of those whom you address, they lose half their weight and influence." As a writer, of course, the inditer of the "Lays of Ancient Rome" stands unapproached and unapproachable.

Sir Francis Doyle's remarks on passing events are characterised by an unwonted calmness of thought and freedom from bias. A High Tory, he can condemn his own party for pusillaminity as freely as he finds fault with his rivals for their cowardice. We commend to the thoughtful reader the observations in regard to the dangers of a free Press—in regard to which the great Napoleon was wont to say, "An empire may be made of adamant, but a free Press will grind it into powder." Then there are some sensible observations relative to war, based upon the assumption that to secure peace a pation must be ready to deford her sight. that to secure peace a nation must be ready to defend her rights, and that it is of no avail for a diplomatist to lay his hand on an empty scabbard or talk when he cannot act. As concerns democracy we are pertinently reminded that though, as enthusiastic Liberals are never tired of proclaiming, the Saviour of mankind was a democrat "his kingdom was not of this world." Home Rule comes in for some crushing satire. "If," says Doyle, "the Irish, as they tell us, are at war with England they can hardly expect England to remain at peace with them, and unless we mean to let society crumble into ruins, law and order must be maintained, even though, in the effort to maintain them, we have to bring to the scaffold men whose motives and characters may separate them from the baseness of a common felon.'

It remains but to add that Sir Francis Doyle, in writing a book of personal reminiscences, has avoided egotism as far as was possible, and when now and again he draws aside the veil which enshrouds his inner self he stands forth a genial, honest, straightforward gentleman of the old school, and withal, as far as the public are concerned, a most pleasant companion and entertaining caterer for general amusement.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

In this number we have two papers regarding woman's "rights." Miss Blackburn accentuates the claim of the fair sex to participation in political life by giving us many instances in which, "in days of eld," women took, to the general advantage, a leading part; and Lady Jersey, in an article thoroughly worthy of her pen, points out, as a rejoinder to Mrs. Lynn Linton, that there was "a deal of human natur" in "our grandmothers," who were decidedly "fast" on occasion, and not less fond of power than their descendants.

The question, however, which Mrs. Linton raised was, whether it was desirable to give the fair sex in England a practical influence on politics. There is no need to dive deep into ancient or modern history in order to find women who, "exalted far above their sphere," have swayed, and well swayed, the destinies of nations. But they were individuals of an exceptional order. They were the exceptions which prove the rule. Nor can the fact, that certain women have successfully governed an empire has fact, that certain women have successfully governed an empire, be fairly adduced as proof that the average of women are fitted to exercise political functions, even of the humblest kind.

cio's use of pure language undefiled, always he an impediment to his being read, that he too often refers to matters such as those with which a morbidly prurient journal (characteristically enough) lately disgusted every respectable reader. There are, probably, few schoolgirls who have not read Boccaccio's magnificent description of the plague at Florence—which far surpasses Defoe's account of the historical London plague—though a good many persons, not unfamiliar with the "stock" Italian works, may never have even heard of Boccaccio as a poet. To such we can only say, as do the street butchers, "Buy, buy, all good." Miss Clerke plainly shows how much Chaucer has (mainly by compression) improved on Boccaccio's narratives. We don't believe that the dear old Italian could have given so briefly and so sweetly: sweetly :-

"Up rose the sun, and up rose Emilie."

It is no more than justice to praise, most warmly, the renderings of Boccaccio's "Theseide" which are given in the critique

Mr. Radcliffe Cooke has well won his spurs, not only by twice beating the Radicals in a very stronghold of Radicalism, but by making his mark in the House as no mean speaker. His article on "The Parnellites in Parliament" is thoroughly to our taste. The writer shows that (as we have repeatedly urged) the stern and impartial enforcement of law—may we not say of the Decalogue?—is really all that is needed to restore peace to Ireland, and will inevitably lead to the collapse of the (so-called National) League, to which alone disturbance and discontent are

We are pleased to see an Essay on "Social Reforms in India" from the pen of a Native gentleman, Mr. Nanda Lal Ghosh. The paper is very suggestive; dealing, to a great extent, with the question of Government interference, or non-interference, not so question of Government interference, or non-interference, not so much with the religion, as with the customs, (infant-marriage, widow-marriage, &c.) supposed—however erroneously—to be affiliated to the religion, of our Native fellow-subjects. It is not often that we meet with so well-considered a criticism on a musical work as that contributed to this number by Mr. C. V. Stanford, himself a composer of no mean order, on Sir A. Sullivan's Golden Legend. It is no small praise to a composer Sullivan's Golden Legend. It is no small praise to a composer that he should, after a somewhat prolonged excursion into the region of comic opera, be able to raise himself, with undiminished powers, into the higher position justly assigned to him by Mr. Stanford, who wisely admonishes this distinguished musician that he must henceforth aim at "progression in the direction indicated by his latest production."

EMINENT WOMEN SERIES.—"MARGARET OF ANGOU-LEME, QUEEN OF NAVARRE."

LEME, QUEEN OF NAVARRE. **

The sixteenth century was one distinguished by producing, in exceptional numbers, throughout Europe, men and women of rare ability and learning. Whether we turn to state-craft, to literature, to the arts of war, or to those of peace, we find, in nearly every country of our quarter of the globe, great persons of both scxes, who have left on history an indelble and ineffaceable impress, and whose names will not be forgotten so long as history shall continue to be written. Of those of the gentler sex none better deserve, and none better repay, careful and sympathetic study than the subject of this little volume, the sister of the King of France, for many years practically the ruling spirit of the country, and, to quote her contemporary, Marino Cavalli, "the wisest, not only of the women, but of the men, of France."

She lived so much in the fierce light of publicity, that Macaulay's "every schoolboy" is doubtless acquainted with the main facts relating to her history. But there was ample room, and verge enough for a biography at once short, simple, and readable. This is what Miss Robinson has here undertaken to give us, and she has well fulfilled her relf-imposed task.

she has well fulfilled her relf-imposed task.

Margaret's mother, Louisa of Savoy, though outshone by her more celebrated daughter, was no ordinary person. At a time when her son, Francis the First of France, abandoning himself to anything rather than politics, left the helm of the State to his mother and sister, Louisa's decision of purpose was universally known. Cardinal Bibbiena not very reverently said, "Scrivere à Luisa di Savoia è come scrivere alla stessa Trinità." To this was from her father, Charles of Orleans, that she derived many not less valuable qualities, especially a gentleness, which was somewhat wanting in her more imperious mother. "His delicate and benevolent nature qualified the love of learning and capacity for devotion which her mother gave her."

Margaret's marriage to a "shallow mediocrity," Charles Duke of Alençon, "stupid and mean of spirit," provided her with a husband rather than a help meet for her. His disgraceful incompetency it was, as is well-known, which primarily caused the fatal overthrow of the French army at Pavia, and that prolonged imprisonment of Francis I. which was so nearly terminating in imprisonment of Francis I., which was so nearly terminating in his death.

During the lamentable period of his captivity, Margaret's devotion to a brother whom she adored was shown in the most striking manner. Charles V., her brother's captor, though a capable, ang manner. Charles V., her brother's captor, though a capable, was not a generous, Prince; and Margaret ran no common risk when she undertook a journey into Spain in order to comfort, and to intercede for, his prisoner. She was, in fact, warned (p. 70) that, unless she left Spain by the expiration of the period fixed in Charles's safe-conduct, "the Emperor would consider her his captive." She had, indeed, an interview with Charles (who showed himself hard and unsympathetic), and had to return to France re infectal, Francis being eventually released on the most onerous conditions—which, to be sure (except that of his marriage to the Emperor's sister), he never kept.

conditions—which, to be sure (except that of his marriage to the Emperor's sister), he never kept.

Margaret's name will be known to many ardent Protestants in one capacity—as one of the patrons of the Reformation. From her first correspondence with the somewhat mystical Bishop Briconnet of Meaux, her mind seems to have been eminently receptive of the "New Ideas"; and to her potent patronage, more than to any serious convictions of any kind whatever on the part of the flighty and self-indulgent king, it was that Calvin and many of the best known representatives of his school owed their safety. The whole history of Margaret's connection with the Reformers is well set out in this biography, and can be warmly commended as clear, and exceedbiography, and can be warmly commended as clear, and exceedingly deserving of perusal. Her gentle nature would certainly have revolted from the sour fanaticism of Genevan "reformers," have revolted from the sour fanaticism of Genevan "reformers," and such inhumanities as the slow roasting of Michael Servetus, as it did from the persecutions which, after the peace of Crépy, Francis inflicted on the followers of Waldo, known (abroad as Waldenses, here) as Vaudois. For she was especially averse to cruelty. "Human life, knowledge, tolerance, and freedom were dearer to her than any code or creed" (p. 96). "Her respect for life is stronger than her respect for any moral code" (p. 180). "What I have done," were her dying words, "I have done from compassion, not from conviction" (pp. 80, 227).

For the Béarnois home of her second husband, Henri D'Albret, titular King of Navarra, her court at Nárze was the abode of

For the Béarnois home of her second husband, Henri D'Albret, titular King of Navarre, her court at Nérac was the abode of nearly all that France produced of literary ability. It was an Abbey of Thelema, a place devoted to the Gai Saber. And we encounter Margaret here, not only as a Queen who both reigns and governs, but as the distinguished authoress of the more celebrated than known "Heptameron." To this interesting book—by no means one to lie on the drawing-room table—Miss Robinson devotes two chapters of careful and well-considered criticism. Margaret closed her life, on the whole, disappointed. Shorn of her influence by the loss of her brother, who reciprocated his "Mignonne's" affection, straitened in circumstances by her daughter's extravagances, and profoundly hurt by her marriage to a man whom, though the girl loved him, she herself disliked, Margaret breathed her last on the shortest day of 1549. There is no doubt, though every endeavour has been made to conceal is no doubt, though every endeavour has been made to conceal the fact, that she died a sincere Catholic; her object through life having rather been to free the Gallican Church from the domination of Rome, than to alter a single article of its creed.

Miss Robinson has evidently performed a labour of love in writing this excellent narrative, which may fairly challenge comparison with the best of its predecessors in this capital Series.

As an example of self-denial in a man who, at the beginning of the tale, acts from no higher motive than a desire to do a kind action, and whose innate goodness of heart is finally purified by a reference to higher things, no reader need desire a better than Miss Shipton's "Edward Sewell."

"Two Homes" is a prettily told tale of country life, the families of a benevolent squire's lately deceased bailiff, and of his gamekeeper, forming the dramatis personæ. The bailiff's widow gamekeeper, forming the dramatis persona. The bailiff's widow has an excellent and industrious daughter, Alice (the heroine, if we may so say, of the little rural tale). The story, the conclusion of which may be surmised, is one eminently adapted for the perusal of girls, and will be particularly useful to those of the class to whom its personages belong. In these days, when a father is usually mentioned as "the relieving officer," and when the one "commandment with promise" is far more honoured in the breach than in the observance, such a tale as "How Bill Sims honoured his Father" is especially welcome, and few of the many young people who, we especially welcome, and few of the many young people who, we hope, will read it, will do so without profit.

Of the other works, we can only refer to Miss Macquoid's "Little Vagabond" and "Checco." Both are interesting, and well adapted for children. The Sunday-school cards are excellent. But why is Frankfort Cuthodrell surrounded. But why is Frankfort Cathedral, surmounted as it is with the German Imperial Crown, and the scene of so many important events, not included in the list of the ninety-six Cathedrals and Churches? Surely, too, the reference to the death of Agag by the hands of Samuel should have been to the 23rd, not to the 7th, verse of I. Sam., chap. xv.?

We have received a communication from Messrs. We have referred to the copy of the work and find that we were strictly accurate in asserting that "there is no indication where the Vocabulary is procurable." We adhere to our opinion, that it is advisable, alike in the interest of the author and of the public, that this defect should be remedied. If, however, Messrs. Richardson are disposed to content themselves with an intimation in our columns that the work can be procured at 13, Pall-mall, we have much pleasure in meeting their wishes. sure in meeting their wishes.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for the purpose of supplying the public with pure and genuine Ceylon Tea, and to combine with it also the sale of pure Coffee.

It is an undoubted fact that Ceylon Tea is gradually growing in favour with the public, and it is also notorious that comparatively few people can procure it, and those who do cannot always get it pure and genuine. Even Teas sold as Ceylon are in many instances mixed with China and Indian; but by those who know what Ceylon Tea is, the very common question asked is, "Where can we get it pure?" As a strong evidence of the high estimation in which Ceylon Tea is held, one has only to hear the remarks in its favour by the vast numbers of those who have visited the Indian and Colonial Exhibition, and have had a cup of real Ceylon Tea.

One great difficulty why the use of Ceylon Tea has not been more fully developed up to this time has been the smallness of supplies as compared with China and Indian, but as the production increases, which it evidently will dovery rapidly, it renders it all the more necessary that the larger supplies should be prominently placed before the notice of the actual consumer, and thus encourage a more general demand.

By therefore introducing channels on an extended scale for the sale of the pure and undulterated articles, a greater demand, it is confidently expected, will be created, as the advantage to the consumer must soon become increasingly apparent, and the favourable position which Ceylon Teas have already commanded can thereby searcely fail to be still further materially enhanced.

The intention is to open a Central Depot or Warehouse in London, and, as opportunities offer, to establish Branch Depots or Agencies in different parts of London and the provincial towns, and to adopt all the necessary sources and means for publicity.

The importations of Ceylon Tea have already amounted this year to seven millions of pounds weight, and with the increasing production promise very soon to reach twenty millions. From all these supplies of the various estates ample opportunity will be afforded for the Company to select suitable qualities, according to their requirements, as it is intended to make the entire purchases in the London market from all the importations as brought forward. In adopting this course continued uniformity of each description sold by the Company can thus be insured, instead of depending always and solely on any particular estate, the quality from which may vary season by season.

No other than Caylon Tea will be bought or sold by the Company.

estate, the quanty from which may vary season by season.

No other than Ceylon Tea will be bought or sold by the Company.

It would be premature to form any calculation as to the quantity of Tea likely to pass through the Company's sources of disposal, but estimating the amount at only a quarter of a million of pounds weight, the profit would amply justify the expectation of a very good dividend.

The sale of Coffee also should produce very satisfactory results.

While the fullest means will be adopted to promote the safe extension of the Company's business, every regard will be paid to avoid unnecessary expense. No promotion money whatever will be paid. Arrangements are already in progress to carry out the intentions of the Company, so that no time will be lost in the furtherance of its operations.

Tea growers and merchants in Ceylon, and others in this country connected with the Ceylon trade, have been invited to take an interest in this Company, and thus assist in promoting its success.

Prospectuses, together with Forms of Application for Shares, may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, 13, Great Tower Street, London, E.C.

WITHOUT indulging in any extravagant ideas, there seems no reason why the Company's sales should be limited to the moderately-estimated amount of a quarter of a million lbs. annually, and if the profits be calculated, even at a considerable reduction, on the basis of those stated by "Stocks and Shares" of the 10th instant, they would still yield dividends which may be variously estimated from 20 to 30 per cent.

"VALETE AC PLAUDITE."

It has come to be in accordance with the eternal fitness of things that managers of political shows should, at the close of their season, come before the curtain and make a farewell address to the public in the manner of managers belonging to the theatrical world. Sir Grant Duff, who. during his tenure of office at Madras, has rather held aloof from the vulgar throng, and has been content to find in botany and self-consciousness sufficient reward for all the toils of office, has now taken everybody into his confidence in what the Times correspondent, telegraphing from Calcutta yesterday, describes as "a long and characteristic" Minute, in which the retiring Governor reviews his term-The Minute, however, had reached London before the telegram, and it is the subject of eulogistic comment in the columns of the United Service Gazette of Saturday. But it may be doubted whether our contemporary's estimation of the document will be generally endorsed. The French proverb which declares that it is the first step which is the difficult one did not cause any misgivings to the eminent statesman who stepped out of Parliamentary life in England to India. Sir Grant explains this:-

The first impulse of such a one will often be to try and make the institutions among which he finds himself as like as circumstances will permit to those which he has left behind. From that natural and generous error I was saved by various circumstances among them by having formed for more than five years a portion of the machinery which connects the great paternal Autocracy of India with the crowned Democracy at home. I determined from the very first neither to form nor to adopt any wide schemes but to be content with carefully examining the condischemes, but to be content with carefully examining the condi-tion of the Madras Presidency, with a view to introducing those practical improvements to which I should eventually see my

How much Madras has practically "improved" under Sir Grant Duff is now history at the India Office and in Madras itself, although it may be yet not altogether known to the British public at home. But the Minute, according to our military contemporary, "is in Sir M. E. Grant Duff's happiest vein, and treats with great lucidity, but still with a free and light hand, a crowd of subjects.

And a motley crowd it is. Under one heading-that of the Chief Secretary's Department—there are notices of twenty-one different subjects, from finance to literature; under that of Revenue there are twenty-three subjects dealt with, from agriculture to the holding of land by Madras civilians. The Military, Public Works, Irrigation and Railway Departments all come under review. The writer thinks that considerable changes must be made before long in the constitution of the Civil Service, and that Native merit should be more encouraged than it has hitherto been, but that the quality of the European officials must be maintained at all costs. He says that competition, while the least bad mathod of recruiting the inferior branches of the public service, is not an ideal method. And the Minute concludes thus:

There are, I believe, some Europeans even in India who would fain inflict upon the people amidst whom they dwell all the institutions which have been found to be "blessings" in the West under circumstances wholly unlike those with which we have to deal in this country. They are very welcome to their opinions; but I do not share them, and I fear that they and their disciples, who, because they knew me to be a Liberal in English politics, jumped to the conclusion that they would find me a "viewy" innovator in India, have had some disappointments. They were well warned, however. . . Other lustra may bring other duties, as they certainly will bring to the helm of affairs in this Presidency many persons who will fulfil those which I have enumerated with an amount of ability to which I can be ability to the ab which I can lay no claim, but I am well assured that they will never bring to the great office which I am soon to vacate anyone who is more attached to India and its inhabitants, or more anxious to promote their best interests according to his lights.

This is all "characteristic," but nobody denied to Mr. Grant Duff on taking up his appointment in India the credit of having "good intentions." He has paved Madras with them, and the "practical" results are manifold. We have already touched upon some of those results-results which can only be referred to with regret and pain. It has been lamentable to find failure in almost every direction in which ability, zeal and honourable instincts in the chief ruler led one to hope for success. Theories as perfect as philosopher or philanthropist could desire have broken down utterly when the attempt was made to put them into practice. But Sir Grant Duff, on laying down office, pens a parting Minute, in which there appears to be no consciousness of any failure that might be laid to his charge; all is pure, unadulterated optimism. His self-satisfaction is that of him

> "Who said were he ordain'd to run His long career of life again He would do all that he had don

Even in the matter of what is now known as the "Madras Scandals" Sir Grant Duff disposes of all comment as being uncalled for or ill-natured :-

No doubt a vast amount of spiteful nonsense has been talked and written about the sins, in the matter of land, of that very honourable body of men, the Madras Civil Service. But I am sure all its members will see that to transgress ever so little the rules about land-holding is a sad mistake, as it enables its enemies to heap upon the service all manner of false accusations.

But the evil that men do lives after them, and, unfortunately, the evil born of these scandals still survives. That the Minute is able and written in the happiest vein may be allowed, but to say, as the contemporary who eulogises it, that "Sir M. E. Grant Duff's successor may well be grateful for such a vade mecum" is to say too much. Mr. Bourke fortunately has studied the world of men more than the world of books, and he goes out to Madras to govern according to that experience, and he will hardly seek for guidance pages written "with a free and light hand," and as if "with milk on rose leaves," such as this "characteristic" Minute shows itself to be.

THE Finance Committee will, it is expected, have their report ready before the Vicercy's arrival at cold-weather headquarters. t is to be written in Calcutta.

A STRONG GOVERNMENT.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,-The recent lamentable riots in Etawah and Delhi prove the necessity of having a strong Government in India. In the United Kingdom riots near Charing Cross or in Belfast quickly subside, but rioting in India may cause incredible mischief.

Anarchy for a few weeks may imperil thousands of European lives, and cause incalculable loss of property.

In former days the Chief Magistrate of a District was a man of authority, wielding the power of the British Government. When he was a good officer he took care to be on the best terms with the Military, and in times of trouble he considered himself as Aide-de-Camp or Assistant to the Colonel or General commanding.

The Natives of India, both Hindoo and Mahomedan, look upon the Chief Magistrate with the greatest reverence, and Native public opinion deprecates any want of respect to him. My eldest brother has ridden on a pony into riotous crowds, unprotected save by his position as a Magistrate, though the riots at Mooborikpon often ended in arson and murder.

In the present day what can the Chief Magistrate do? Government has year after year deprived him of authority and power. Kindly read the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 6th of October, page 436, regarding the serious riot at Etawah. The mob jeered at and scoffed Mr. Hoey; and the Police, both foot and horse, refused to obey his orders. What a position for a Chief Magistrate in a town where the inhabitants looked anxiously to him for protection! The railway station master saved him from ridicule and diagrace.

I am glad to see that you are republishing the Pioneer Mail's caustic satires on English weak misgovernment called Be-bund-obust nuggur. In page 439 of the paper of the 6th inst. we have a picture of the anarchy which prevails. All the Departments, Commissariat, Transport, Telegraph, Post Office, and Police, con-sider themselves quite independent of the Chief Magistrate, and study the art of escaping work and responsibility while drawing good salaries.—Your obedient servant, October 27th.

OBITUARY.

GENERAL SIR ABRAHAM JOSIAS CLOETE.—We have to announce the death of General Sir Abraham Josias Cloë.é, K.C.B., K.H., which occurred at his house in London on Tuesday last. deceased officer was in his 93rd year, having been born in the year 1794. The date of his first commission was 15th June, 1809. He was first employed in active service in the Mahratta War, 1817-19. He served in 1846 in the Kaffir War as Deputy-War, 1817-19. He served in 1846 in the Kaffir War as Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General, and for his services was mentioned in despatches and made C.B. In the Kaffir War, 1851-53, he was chief of the staff during the operations in the Basuto country, and commanded a division at the battle of Berea, and for his conduct he was again mentioned in despatches and gained the medal, and was promoted to K.C.B. He was also a Knight of the Hanoverian Guelphic Order. In 1871 he had risen to the full rank of general, and in 1877 he was placed on the list of retired officers. For some years General Cloëté had been colonel of the Princess of Wales's Own (Yorkshire) Regiment, which post he occupied till his death. he occupied till his death.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL J. M. BANNATYNE.—Lieutenant-Colonel John Millar Bannatyne, formerly of the 8th (the King's) Regiment of Foot, died at Bournemouth on the 20th of October, at the age of 57 years. He served with the 8th Regiment at the siege and assault of Delhi in 1857, including the repulse of sorties on the 9th, 14th, and 18th July, and six days' fighting in the city, being twice wounded. He commanded the regiment at the capture of the Burn Castion on the night of the 19th September, and the infantry of the column which occupied the Jumna Musjid on the 20th September. He also served as brigade major to Greathead's moveable column, including the action of Bolundshur, affair of Allyghur, and battle of Agra, and was present as brigade-major of the 3rd Brigade of the Army under Lord Clyde in the action of Dilkoosha and relief of Lucknow, the affair of the 2nd and action of the 6th December at Cawnpore, and action of Khudagunj, receiving the brevet of major and the medal with two clasps tor his services.

THE LATE REV. DR. BUCKLEY.—The Englishman hears from Cuttack of the death of the Rev. J. Buckley, D.D., of the Bactist Mission, which took place at his residence there on the 4th ult.

LIEUT. HENRY ERNEST DAVIS, of the 1st Battalion the Border Regiment, died on the 20th ult., of typhoid fever, at Sialkot, India, in the 21st year of his age. He was the youngest son of the late Lieut.-Colonel W. Davis, B.S.C., and entered the Service in August last year.

LIEUT. JOSEPH MOYLE O'HALLORAN SHERER, of the 1st Battalion the Suffolk Regiment, died on the 19th ult. at Jhansi, Central India, aged twenty-two years. He was the only son of Major-General J. Sherer, and entered the Service in May last year, and was lately appointed Officiating Wing Officer of the 40th Regiment N.I.

Miscellaneous.

The Pioneer, in discussing the probabilities of Sir Lepel Griffin being appointed to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab, mentions a fact which is not generally known. It appears that last year Sir Lepel was elected by Lord Salisbury as Special Envoy to Pekin, to discuss certain international questions connected with the Burma frontier; but just then the Government went out and the proposal fell through.

THE cold-weather tour of the Public Works Minister will be an extensive one this year. Leaving Simla on the 27th instant, Sir Theodore Hope will travel direct to Poona and inspect the Western Deccan Railway on November 1. Thence he will journey to Hyderabad in order to visit the Nizam's State Railway journey to Hyderabad in order to visit the Nizam's State Railway extension; and from November 7 to 15 he will inspect the Bellary-Kistna, the South Deccan, and the Cuddapah-Nellore Railways. On the 17th Sir Theodore Hope will embark at Madras for Rangoon, whence he will go strait to Mandalay, inspect the Irrawaddy Valley Railway as far as Kyoukse, and then return to Rangoor, thereafter visiting Tounghoo and examining the forty miles of the proposed extension of the Sittang Valley Railway northwards to Yemethen. Calcutta will be eventually reached on December 14 December 14.

A CORRESPONDENT with the Afghan Boundary Commission A CORRESPONDENT with the Afghan Boundary Commission writes:—We apparently had a narrow escape from being sent to Badakshan to demarcate the Afghan Russian Frontier in that region. The Russians tried all they could to persuade our Government to agree to it; but, luckily for us, they turned a deaf ear to the request until such time as the Khwaja Salar dispute is arranged. The Russian Commissioner apparently thinks that it will be necessary to send General Russian officers at an early date to Badakshan to survey and explore; but they will, I fancy have to obtain the Ameer's permission first, which may not be quite as easy a thing as they imagine. This boundary will, of course, have to be decided sooner or later: but it would have been rather more than a joke for us, as we could not well have commenced work before next spring, and should have had to amuse ourselves as best we could during the long dreary winter days.

DISCUSSING recent appointments to the Viceroy's Council, the Statesman says:—"Although the appointment of Sir Charles Aitchison will bring a strong and just man into the Council, the Bengal Civilian has the idiosyncracies of his service more or less stamped upon him, and we should have been glad to see a really strong man from the other Presidencies instead. Mr. Peile is exceptionally able. He has made, and will leave, a distinct and enduring mark upon the Western Presidency. We doubt if any part of India has undergone so extraordinary and radical a change as the great Kattiawar Province under the impelling and guiding hand of Mr. Peile. He is one of those men whose influence, while never obtrusive, strikes deep into the character of those about him, and exercises a formative power upon men's thoughts and views of things. We shall welcome Sir Charles Aitchison, but views of things. We shall welco wish he had not been a Bengalee.'

The Viceroy has written to the Acting Governor of Pondicherry, expressing a wish to visit the capital of the Franco-Indian Colonies, on the occasion of his tour in Southern India, and Monsieur Celoron de Blainville has replied, extending to His Excellency a very cordial invitation to accept the hospitality of the city. Lord Dufferin is expected to reach Pondicherry about the first week in December. The newly-appointed Governor of the French Indian Colonies is due, according to present arrangements, by the November French mail steamer, and with him Monsieur Bayol, the veteran merchant of Pondicherry, and chairman of the Chamber of Commerce. Monsieur A. Gallois-Montbrun, the Mayor of the City and President of the Municipality, returns by the December steamer.

The Civil Service Committee of Inquiry.—Will the com-THE Viceroy has written to the Acting Governor of Pondi-

Municipality, returns by the December steamer.

The Civil Service Committee of Inquiry.—Will the committee be composed of Government officials only, as in the case of the Finance Committee of Inquiry? We do not see much reason to congratulate the Native community on this resolution of the Government of India. We have all along disapproved of the idea of keeping the question of appointing Natives to responsible posts at the mercy or whim of the Government of India officials. We shall never get the right to covenanted appointments without a competitive examination, which must be held in England. The only revision should be as regards the limit of age. We think only revision should be as regards the limit of age. We think examinations should be held for uncovenanted appointments also. Any other system would be unsafe as far as the Natives are concerned.—Bombay Samachar.

THE "TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST."

THE "TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST."
As a medium for English, American, and Australian ADVERTISEMENTS of goods suitable for the tropics, India, as well as Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Java, and West Indies (Central America being included in that term), or connected with agriculture, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST stands unrivalled, the work being constantly in the hands of Native as well as constantly in the hands of Native as well as European and American agriculturists. Being a Monthly Periodical, the Tropical Agriculturists lies on the table and is very often referred to during each month, a fact which advertisers will know how to appreciate.

Mr. W. T. Thiselton Dyer, F.L.S., C.M.G., Assistant Director of Kew Gardens, writing of the T. A., refers to it as "an astonishing repertory of everything relating to the economic botany of the East."

** For the sale of plants, seeds, machinery, implements, &c., used in tropical (tea, sugar, fibres, &c.) agriculture, no better advertising medium exists.

OPINIONS.

... The best service which I ever randered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written undermy own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athense im Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calculta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Culcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

LIFE OF

SIR HENRY RAEBURN, R.A.

With Portraits and Appendix by his Great-Grandson.

WILLIAM RAEBURN ANDREW.

Even to look and handle this volume is an enjoyment—nor is the fair ext-rnal promise believed by its contents. This brief memoir of the most eminent Scottish portrait painter is agreeably and profitable reading.—Whitehall Review.

This book is the first separate "Life of Raeburn," and besides being a good sketch of his erreer as far as it goes, contains a list of his works exhibited in Edinburgh in 1876.—Contemporary Review.

Mr. Andrew writes about "the Reynolds of the North" with all that zealous warmth of appreciation which is due from a Scotchman to a Scotchman, a warmth which grows still more fervid when its object is an ancestor.

Attenzeum.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 22nd October; from Allahabad and and Madras to the 2)th October; and from Calcutta to the 19th October

THE VICEROY has accepted the degree of Doctor of Oriental Languages, and his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught that of Doctor of Literature, the highest degree on the Arts side, in the Punjab University.

THE date of the Hon. R. Bourke's arrival in Madras is now definitely stated to be December the 5th. Sir M. E. Grant Duff will start the same day for England.

THE list of K.C.I.E.'s to be created on the 1st of January next, if then, will be a short one, and its composition will mainly depend on the Viceroy's recommendations. It is possible that a further list may appear on the Queen's Birthday, or the anniversary of Her Majesty's Jubilee, but nothing is yet decided.

It is feared that the state of Sir Charles Bernard's health will compel him to take leave very shortly.

SIR CHARLES BERNARD, in response to a communication from the Finance Committee, has recommended the reduction by 10 per cent. of the salaries of all Government servants drawing over Rs. 1.000, and 20 per cent. in the case of salaries over Rs. 2,000 per month.

Burna has been exempted for another year from the operation of the Income Tax Act.

ALL the regiments ordered to Burma have arrived.

Tammu, the important outpost on the Manipur-Burma frontier, where there was some desperate fighting in the summer, is to be garrisoned by the 44th Goorkha Light Infantry from Dibrugarh. The 4th Bengal Infantry, who have suffered much from sickness, will, therefore, return to India.

THE Official Report from Upper Burma for the week ending the 10th instant states that on the 8th the number of people relieved at Mandalay by the free distribution of rice was 592, and the number daily employed on relief works 5,815. A few dacoities have occurred in the Mandalay district, but the Kyaukse, Ava, and Pagan Districts generally are quiet. A new post has been established between Ava and Kyaukse, and another is being established in Sagain. The Eastern Myingyan District is quiet. In the Western Myingyan District the troops have encountered the dacoits, inflicting severe loss, and capturing a few muskets and jingals. The disarmaments of these two districts is progressing. Crop prospects are good, but in Pagan rain is still wanted. Dacoits continue active in the western part of the Menbo District, north of Minhla.

M. HARMAND, the French Consul-General, was at Simla recently, pushing the claims of his compatriots for losses suffered at Mandalay during the late war. The number of claims is 398, and the amount sought as compensation about 644 lakhs of rupees. In such cases as these the claim more often represents the sum which the sufferer asks than the sum which he is at all entitled to receive. The Government of India have referred the matter to the Secretary of State to lay down the general principles upon which the claims shall be dealt with.

MADRAS is to lose for a time the services of the Hon. Mr. Sullivan, who, seeing apparently that he will not be allowed to officiate as Governor of the Southern Presidency, went home by last week's mail steamer. He has some important business to transact at the India Office. Mr. C. G. Master acts as Senior Member of the Madr. s Council during Mr. Sullivan's absence; and Mr. E. F. Webster will take Mr. Ma-ter's place as Junior Member provisionally, Mr. H. E. Stokes becoming Chief Secretary to the Government of Madras.

Bara Chamba Sing has been worsted in his attempt to raise a revolt against the Maharajah of Manipur. He was defeated at Manipur on the 11th inst. by State troops, aided by the frontier police.

A TERRIBLE tragedy occurred in Mhairwarra at a Brahmin village near Neemuch a few weeks ago. The villagers were dissatisfied with the revenue arrangements recently made by the Tonk Durbar, and, as a protest, two women suffered themselves to be burnt to death under dreadful circumstances, their hands being cut off before death at their own request in order that they might be sent to the authorities as proofs of the occurrence.

Two Hindoos were recently executed at Bangalore for the murder of a young man in the Bangalore Fort last July. One of the condemned men, an educated man of respectable family, made a profession of Christianity on the scaffold.

THE Central Rifle Meeting at Poona has been brought to a close, when the prizes were distributed by the Commander-in-Chief of Bombay.

THE members of the Finance Committee have arrived in Calcutta from Madras.

The project for an Agricultural School in the Punjab has fallen through, owing to the unwillingness of the District Boards to help it with the requisite funds.

THE LATE SIR HERBERT MACPHERSON.

MADRAS, Oct. 21.

Referring to the death of Sir Herbert Macpherson, the Mail says that shortly after arrival at Mandalay the Chief is stated to have been indisposed from the effects of a touch of the sun while proceeding up the river. No one, however, expected serious results from fever which ensued soon afterwards, and his Excellency became so unwell that he was medically advised last Friday to proceed to Thayetmyo. No improvement ensuing there, it was decided to move the Chief to Rangoon, thence to sea. At eight in the evening on Monday after leaving Thayetmyo, the Adjutant-General wired to the Madras Government that the Chief was weaker and his state was most critical, and if the fever continued the worst was feared. Sir Herbert Macpherson expired at eight o'clock in the morning yesterday. The Mail says that the Chief will be especially missed, as he was a soldier of varied practical experience, from whom the future good of the service might have confidently been expected. During his short tenure of office the Chief won golden opinions of all with whom he came in contact by the sociability of his temperament and the cheerfulness of manner. With the local Government the Chief's relations were of a most cordial nature. He was a firm advocate of the presidential system and thoroughly identified himself with the best interest of the troops under his command. All classes in India will sympathise with his Excellency's family in their melancholy bereavement. Lady and Miss Macpherson and niece arrived at Government House, Guindy, from Mysore last Tuesd y on a visit to the Governor. Captain Macpherson, Aide de-Camp, was with his father throughout his illness and accompanied his body to Rangoon, where the funeral took place to-day. Minute guns were fired at Madras to-day, the flagstaff was half masted, and a special supplement to the Gazette orders was issued for wearing mourning to the officers of the Madras army for a fortnight. The Chief was attended by Surgeon Major Sibthorpe throughout.

The command of the Burma force devolves on General White; and General Rowlands, in virtue of seniority, succeeds temporarily to the provisional command of the Madras army. Instructions as to the future disposal of the headquarters staff at Burma has not yet arrived at S.mla.

At the Council meeting to-day H.E. the President made the following remarks:—"Before the Council proceeds on its ordinary business I desire to take this opportunity of expressing, in the name of the Government of India, the deep sorrow and concern with which I have heard of the death of one of our most distinguished Generals, S.r Herbert Macpherson. Until yesterday morning I had received no intimation even of his being unwell. On first reaching Mandalay I noted in one of the letters from the Commander-in-Chief that he had suffered from a slight touch of the sun, but he spoke lightly of the matter. From subsequent correspondence there was no appearance of its having produced any inconvenient effects. During the short time that he has remained in command in Burma he devoted himself unremittingly to the arduous duties which he had undertaken. He travelled about the c untry in various directions, and eventually went to Bhamo. I presume that on his return he must have contracted the fatal fever from which he died. It was on his way out to sea, whither he was being taken in the hope of the sca air proving beneficial, that he expired. In Sir Herbert Macpherson both India and England has lost a most talented and trustworthy officer, as well as a gal!ant and noble soldier. He has died in the discharge of duty, and I have taken upon myself to communicate to his family in my name and that of my colleagues our deep sympathy and regret. I have received a telegram from Her Majesty the Queen in which she also expresses her deep sorrow at the calamity which has thus suddenly overtaken herself and

THE FUNERAL.

RANGOON, OCT. 21.

RANGOON, OCT. 21.

Sir Herbert Macpherson was buried this morning in the Cantonment Cemetery at Rangoon with great ceremony. The troops in the garrison paraded in review order under the command of Colonel Nepean, the 5th Madras Infantry lining the road from the Railway Station to the Cemetery.

The chief mourners were Captain Macpherson, Seaforth Highlanders, son of Sir Herbert, Captain Beatson, Military Secretary, and Surgeon-Major Sibthorpe. The pall-bearers were Deputy Surgeon-General Donelly, Colonel Upcher and Lieutenant-Colonel Bromhead, South Wales Borderers, Lieutenant-Colonel Burgess, Royal Artillery, Lieutenant-Colonel Sartorius, 1st Beloochees, and Brigade-Surgeon Monsell. The service was conducted by the Bishop of Rangoon. A large number of non-officials attended the funeral. the funeral.

Hotes of the Meck.

It is very positively stated in quarters likely to be wellinformed that Sir C. Arbuthnot will shortly be transferred from the Bombay command to that of Madras, at the same time relieving Sir Frederick Roberts in Burma, when his Excellency makes up his mind to return to his own headquarters. If this transfer be carried out, it is said that his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught will be appointed to the command of the Bombay army with the rank of lieutenant-general.

LATEST telegrams from India state that Lord Clanboye, whose serious illness caused considerable alarm to his family, lms now been pronounced out of danger, and that Lady Dufferin, who had gone to attend at her son's sick-bed, was about to rejoin her husband and accompany him on tour.

THE VICEBOY has expressed his intention of presenting the students of the Punjab Chicfs' College with a gold medal for competition. That Lord Dufferin would, upon the occasion of laying the foundation-stone of the institution which is to ornament Lahore, speak ably and eloquently about the advantages of cultivating the intellect was only to be expected. Let it be hoped that the Native chiefs and nobles who were present understood the value of the recommendation, and will bring up their sons and heirs to value "wisdom above rubies," and to "smile at the claims of long descent," compared with the claims that their Alma Mater will have upon them.

But His Excellency must rather have astonished some of his hearers amongst the mixed multitude present at the tamasha by other advice he gave :-

He strongly recommended his audience to undertake a thorough search in the Punjab for Arabic and Persian manu-scripts, like that carried on by the Bengal Asiatic Society for Sanscrit manuscripts. He would also venture to recommend a detailed survey of the numerous vernacular dialects of the Punj b, the collection of their literature, and the recording of their legends and folk-lore. In their hands might perhaps lie the key to one of the most interesting problem that had ever occupied the attention of the philologist or historian. And even though the primeval secret of all might elude search there could be no doubt that a careful study of the dialects, folk-lore, and traditions deposited in the knot of mountains where the Hindoo Koosh mingles its streams with those of the Himalayas by the various races and tribes which had passed from north to south, whether Aryan, Mongolian, Greek, Syrian, Turk, or Pathan, would furnish a mine of material for ethnological and sociological study which was yet hardly worked, and which could not fail to produce important

THE above will create a greater stir amongst the Europeans in the country of the Five rivers than amongst the learned Pundits, for whom, perhaps, the hint was chiefly intended. The capital of the Purjab will become as famous for its literary research by military men and civilians as it one time was for its piety as represented in both Services. In those days going to church with conspicuous regularity meant going up higher in the scale of promotion, and now literature will become the handmaiden of religion-a position which she has held before now in the East.

But what about that "primeval secret" to which Lord Dufferin refers, and which, although it may elude the search for it, he yet appears to think lies somewhere beyond the Hindoo Koosh? Has his Excellency become the head of the Theosophists, and is he about to recognise Mr. A. P. Sinnett as his prophet? Let us go into the "occult world" again, and this time with unsandelled feet, and not as scoffers!

A Gazette of India Extraordinary was issued on the 1st inst., stating that the Governor-General in Council desired to place on record his high appreciation of the valuable services of the officers and men of the Afghan Frontier Commission. Sir W. Ridgeway and the political officers had shown judgment, skill, and tenacity in their endeavours to secure the primary objects of the Commission, and the results obtained in the other departments were highly satisfactory, while the military escort had upheld the credit of Her Majesty's army. The Viceroy heartily congratalated the members of the Commission on contemplating their trying duty, and welcomed them back.

AT the present ruinous rate of exchange, lieutenants who are studying in Russia on full Indian pay and half staff allowance receive no more than the minimum furlough pay; consequently, the deduction of the sum advanced for preliminary expenses leaves them scarcely anything to live on, to say nothing of the cest of tuition. The Secretary of State for India has, therefore, ruled that in all cases the advance of pay made to officers on their proceeding to Russia for a course of study under clause 26 of India Army Circulars, 1886, shall in future be recoverable by ton monthly instalments instead of five.

ANOTHER young and promising life has been lost at polo playing. Lieutenant G. K. Daly, of the Central India Horse, son of the gallant and popular Sir H. Daly, has succumbed to the injuries he received at the Bombay Polo Tournament on the 14th ult. In our Obituary notice will be found a record of his services, and we feel sure that there will be many sympathisers in England as in India with his father and tamily at the sad loss they have sus-

THE news of the death of Mr. James Gibbs, C.S.I., C.I.E., will be received in Anglo-Indian circles, especially at Bombay, with great regret. He was only in his sixty-second year, and although his had been a busy life there was every promise of further usefulness in the "eventide" at home. In India Mr. Gibbs hold several high appointments, having been Assistant Commissioner in Scinde under Sir Bartle Frere, senior Judge of the High Court, member of the Government, and Chanceller of the University of Bombay, and more recently senior member of the Supreme Government of Iudia under the last three Viceroys.

THE REV. NARCISO A. FIALHO, VICAR-GENERAL OF HYDERABAD, and a much respected and talented clergymen of the Postuguese jurisdiction, has been nominated canon of the Partriarchal See of Goa, by the Lisbon Government.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.) (Times Correspondents.) INDIA.

CALCUTTA. Nov. 7.

The Viceroy's visit to Lahore and the speeches made there have been the principal events of the past week. The party arrived on Monday evening. On Tue-day visits were received from the Native chiefs, and these visits were returned. On Wedfrom the Native chiefs, and these visits were returned. On Wednesday afternoon Lind Dufferin laid the foundation stone of the Punjab Chiefs' College, in presence of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Lieutenant-Governor the Maharajah of Cashmere, the Nawab of Bhawulpore, and several Rajahs. Sir C. Aitchison commenced the proceedings by explaining the objects of the college, and stating that it owed its inception primarily to the liberality of the Chiefs of the Punjab. He expressed regret at the absence, through illness, of the principal subscriber, the Maharajah of Puttials.

The Viceroy, having laid the foundation stone, delivered a speech, in which he alluded to the great sympathy which he felt for institutions connected with the education of the young nobility and gentry of India. He congratulated the Lieutenant-Governor and gentry of India. He congratulated the Lieutenant-Governor on being able to illustrate the close of his useful and honourable career as ruler of the province by the foundation of such an institution, and suggested that it should be called the Aitchison College.

On the same evening, replying to an address from the municipality, the Vicercy touched on various topics. He referred to the steady progress of Lady Dufferin's efforts to improve the condition of the women of India, and expressed cordial appreciation of Sir Aitchison's work during his tenure of office as Lieutenant-

On Thurslay the Convocation of the Pubjab University conferred the degrees of Doctor of Oriental Learning on Lord Dufferin, and Doctor of Literature on the Duke of Connaught. On this occasion the Viceroy spoke at considerable length. After expressing his thanks and saying that if not a very advanced he expressing his thanks and saying that if not a very advanced he was a very earnest and devoted student of at least one branch of the special literature which Oriental learning cultivated, he went on to speak regarding the ends and objects of the Punjab University. He hailed with pleasure the existence of a home of education, endowed with such distinctive characteristics. It was fitting that while in other parts of India Western sciences and literature were assigned deserved pre-eminence, here in the Punjab they should be reminded that treasures of wi-dom and high morality, the pleasant fields of a wealthy postical literature and morality, the pleasant fields of a wealthy poetical literature, and deep mines of philological, antiquarian, and historical lore existed in regions altogether apart from Western observation and ex-

On Thursday afternoon occurred the most interesting event of On Thursday afternoon occurred the most interesting event of all—namely, the reception of the Afghan Frontier Commission, and the investiture of Sir W. Ridgeway with the Star of India. After the ceremony the Viceroy addressed the company. He said that, great as was his pleasure in conferring on Sir W. Ridgeway the honour so justly awarded him, he felt that his satisfaction would not be complete unless he took that opportunity of welcoming back those other officers who had so ably seconded him in carrying out his difficult and arduous duties. Few tasks were more uncreateful or more exposed to result in mortification were more ungrateful, or more exposed to result in mortification, than the delimiting of a frontier in the interests of an ally Disputable points always arose which it was almost impossible to settle without exciting some discontent. He was happy to think, however, that, thanks to the good sense and intelligence of the Ameer, they had already been able to settle more than one controverted matter in a pacific manner; and he thought that the moderation and conciliatory spirit shown by His Highness regarding the demarcation of the western portion of the frontier ought to facilitate an arrangement of the only matter remaining in dispute in a manner consensate with his interests and with in dispute in a manner consonant with his interests and with right. But, however this might be, he desired to inform Sir W. Ridgeway and his associates that their countrymen and the whole of the Indian community were heartily glad to see them back. Their proceedings had been watched with the deepest interest Their proceedings had been watched with the deepest interest and sympathy. They had been exposed to privations and perils, but from first to last their conduct had been deserving of the highest praise, and they had exhibited exemplary fortitude and patience. Nor was it inappropriate to remember that, apart from their diplomatic object, they were able to show, thanks to the energy and industry of Sir W. Ridgeway's scientific colleagues, most interesting and valuable geographical and scientific results. Last, but not least, he desired to congratulate them on the auspicious circumstances in which they had passed through Cabul, and the rapidity of their march to the British frontier. That an English mission so constituted should be received as honoured guests by the Ameer, and with a most hearty welcome along the guests by the Ameer, and with a most hearty welcome along the entire route, was itself a remarkable and significant circumstance, which could not fail to have the most beneficial effect on their future relations with Afghanistan. He hoped that, however disagreeable and irksome might have been the period spent in Afghanistan, it would hereafter suggest only pleasant reminiscences; for he was happy to think that the one thing necessary to all servants of the Queen in order to make a retrospect agreeable was the consciousness that they had nobly and fithfully done their duty. The Viceroy and the Duke of Connught then inspected the escort, and the Viceroy then addressed to them a few words of warm congratulation and thanks.

The Indian Government has published a very able despatch, replying to the arguments in the recent Treasury Mi tute on the exchange. After discussing and answering these arguments at great length, thedespatch says :-

"What the Government considers essential in the interests of "What the Government considers essential in the interests of the finances of India is the establishment of stability in the relative value of gold and silver, and the removal of the danger hanging over the silver market from the existence of large quantities of overvalued silver money in the currencies of France, the United States, and other countries. For the attainment of these ends, it proposes generally the utilisation of silver as currency to a great extent, as well as an international agreement for the free coinage of silver, and for making both gold and silver coin a legal tender at a fixed ratio by a group of nations possessed of a metallic currency sufficient to maintain that ratio permanently. The ratio should not be lower than the average market ratio of one to 15½.

"So much importance does the Indian Government attach to the stability of relative value that it would not object to any ratio within these limits, and would be willing to undertake either to maintain the present silver standard, or to coin both silver and gold for all comers at a fixed ratio."

It is announced that the Public Service Commission will consist It is announced that the Public Service Commission will consist of the following persons (the Viceroy reserving power to make additional nominations if desirable):—President, Sir C. Aitchison; Members, Sir Charles Turner, Mr. Crosthwaite, Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, Mr. Romesh Chunder Mitter, Judge of the Bengal High Court, Messrs. Quinton, of the North-West Provinces, Peacock, of Bengal, Stokes, of Madras, and Stewart, of Bombay, representing the Civil Service, Messrs. Ryland, for the uncovenanted service, Hudson, for the non-official Europeans, and White, for the Eurasians, the Rajah of Bhinga, Syed Ahmed Khan Bahadur, Kazi Shahbudin Ramaswamy Moodeliar, and Rao Bahadur Krishnaji Milkar, for various classes of the Native community.

BURMA.

General Sir Frederick Roberts left Culcutta on Thursday morning for Rangoon. The Viceroy, replying to an address of the Labore Municipality, said that he accepted their congratulations on the annexation of Burma. The difficulties now being met with there were the inevitable results of their endeavours to restore order among a people who for centuries had been a prey to anarchy. He had no doubt that within a reasonable time tranquillity would be restored.

RANGOON, NOV 6.

At a council of war held to day it was resolved to give commissioners and officers in Burma more power to despatch troops to points where their services may be needed. It was also decided to organise four mounted columns to scour the country between the Kyendwen and Moo rivers for the purposes of hunting down the rebel leaders and destroying their haunts.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, Nov. 7.

At the beginning of list week news was received that the Andaris and Tookhis, the two sections of the great Ghilzai tribe, had risen in revolt against the Ameer, under the sons of the late Woollah Muski Alam, that the well-known freebooter Sidoo and some Hazaras had joined the rebels, and that fears were entertained that the revolt might spread to the whole of the Ghilzai tribe. A later report from Candahar stated that the rebels had attacked a Durani regiment marching to Cabul, near Mukkur, and annihilated it, and that precautions were being taken at Candahar to prevent the disturbances from extending. Candahar to prevent the disturbances from extending. No clear or full news has been received, but the latest report from Cabul is that the rising has been completely suppressed. This statement must be received with caution.

There has been no rain for more than a month, and the people are in great distress. Neither rice nor sugarcane is grown, but wheat, gram, and barley are the staple crops of the rabbi season, and little of either can be sown unless there is rain, the chances of which are now remote, as the cold weather has set in. It is stated that wheat has already gone up to sixteen seers for the rupee, and that if it gets dearer the poorer classes will starve.

THE FINANCE COMMITTEE'S WORK IN MADRAS.

(Madras Times.)

The Finance Committee came, inquired, and have now gone, betaking themselves to pastures new—to the relief, no doubt. of many who were kept in a state of no small excitement during their stay here. The Committee, as represented at Madras, was composed of Mr. C. A. Elliott, C.S.I., President, the Hon. Mr. Justice Cunningham, who is no stranger to Madras, Mr. Westland, Mr. W. H. Bliss, Colonel Filgate, and the Hon. Rao Sahib Mahadeo Govinda Ranade. Arriving at Madras on the 22nd ult., they began their inquiries the same morning in the Council Chamber, Fort St. George; Mr. J. H. Garstin, Second Member of the Board of Revenue, and Mr. J. H. Stokes, Revenue Secretary to Government, being appointed, as local members, to furnish the Committee with any information they members, to furnish the Committee with any information they might require. In accordance with orders issued by Government, the heads of the various departments attended, and were in turn minutely examined as to the working of the departments r spectively under their charge, and as to what scope there was for reduction of expenditure therein; the military being, we understand, the only department which could not be fully gone into, owing to the Commander-in-Chief being engaged in Burma. The result of the Committee's deliberations will, of course, be anxiously awaited by not a few; but as the Committee appear to be altogether a very reticent body, and not at all disposed to divulge their opinions, we sympathise with those who will have to remain in a state of suspense till the result is known. Meanwhile, we would, if we could, most gladly throw light on the subject; but we regret that our most strenuous efforts to penetrate the recesses of the Committee's secrets have not been more successful than the acquisition of the few scraps of information which we proceed to place before our readers. First, Surgeon-Major Thompson will be specially interested to learn that the Committee have come down on the Auxiliary Medical School at Committee have come down on the Auxiliary Medical School at Royapuram—an institution which has done most efficient service, and which owes its success chiefly to the able manner in which it has been conducted by that officer. The Committee, being of opinion that, under present circumstances, the Madras Medical College is able to carry on the work of medical education in this Presidency without extraneous aid, have recommended the abolition of the Royapuram institution. What the local Government have had to say on the subject, or whether they have said anything at all, we are not in a position to state; but, if our memories serves us we are not in a position to state; but, it our memories serves us aright, it is not so very long ago that they admitted the good work this school was doing, and voted for its retention. Then, the Committee, we hear, have brought one of their most formidable shearing instruments to bear on the Presidency Magistrates, who, if the Committee are to "gang their ain gait," are doemed; but, luckily for them, the local Government has, we hear, interpretable the research of their servers of their servers. vened between the shearers and their victims in this matter. The Bench of the Presidency Magistrates' Court, as now constituted, consists of four individuals—a Chief on Rs. 1,200, and three other Magistrates on Rs. 1,000, Rs. 800, and Rs. 800 respectively. This entablishment the Committee consider to be a very certain or acquired to the committee consider to be a considered to the committee considers the commit spectively. This establishment the Committee consider to be a very costly one, considering that the majority of cases that come up for trial are of a very trifling description; and we are scarcely prepared to say that, in this respect, they are altogether wrong—we must, in fact, admit that they are more that half right. Acting on the conviction at which they have arrived in this matter they have, we understand, recommended that only the head should be left, and the three others, what is vulgarly called, "knocked into a cocked hat," or, in plain terms, as our readers may be getting impatient, that the Chief Magistrate should be retained, as at present, on a salary of Rs. 1,200, and that he should have two deputies on an average salary of Rs. 300 each. This is certainly coming down rather heavily, but there is still a glimmer of consolation and a ray of hope left in the fact that the Madras Government hold out for a second magistrate on a salary of Rs. 800. Who will win in the end—the Committee or a salary of Rs. 800. Who will win in the end—the Committee or the Government? Of course, time alone will tell. Meanwhile, we recommend those concerned to abstain as much as possible from thinking about the subject. The Madras Small Cause Court has, we understand, escaped the shearing process entirely, as the Committee were convinced, from the statistics furnished them, that the four Judges had ample work to keep them all fully em-ployed, and that, as the receipts more than covered the expendi-ture, they were not disposed to lessen the facilities at present afforded to suitors by recommending any reductions; the number of clerks and other members of the subordinate establishments they also found, compared very favourably with the other Presidencies. With regard to the High Court, we understand a conference was held with Sir Arthur Collins and, unfortunately, up to the present, that is all the information we are in a position to afford. It is rumoured, however—and, we have reason to believe, with a certain amount of truth—that the Committee are in favour of having in lieu of the present staff of Civilian Trans in favour of having, in lieu of the present staff of Civilian Translators, none but Munshis, with one supervising head over them; shey, however, fear that some difficulty may be experienced in obtaining the services of a person whose lingual attainments shall be such as to admit of his supervising work carried on in so many different languages. The amalgamation of the duties of Surgeon-General and Sanitary Commissioner under one officer has also been recommended; and, although the present incumbents of these appointments raised various objections to this, the Committee stuck to their convictions, and doggedly refused to be moved. The amalgamation of the duties of the Commissioner of Police and the President of the Municipality has also been proposed. The proposal, however, seems to be anything but a happy one, and we have no doubt the local Government will be able to adduce some very cogent reasons why it should not be carried out. The Coronership of Madras—with, of course, the establishment pertaining to that office—may in time to come be looked upon as a thing of the past. The Madras Government are, we hear, quite willing to dispense with the Coroner, and let his duties be carried on by the Police, as is done in the Mofussil, and already in some areas of Madras Town. We also understand that, as the Committee have expressed an opinion in favour of a larger infusion of the Native element into the Revenue Survey, the Government have avowed their readiness to fill every alternative vacancy in the Assistant Superintendent grades with a Native, whose emoluments will be two-thirds of the present salary. We further learn that the Committee fail to see the necessity, for every Collector, Head Assistant, &c., being provided with a special medical subordinate, as when on tour they can obtain medical aid, if required, at the numerous dispensaries which are now located in different places. The Surgeon-General has, we hear, acquiesced in this view. These are some of the recommended the doing away with the Governor's Band and Body Guard, and the curtailment of the Governor's Band and Body Guard, and the curtailment of the Governor's Band and Body Guard, and the curtailment of the Governor's Band and Body Guard, a

A RAILWAY TO MANDALAY. (Pioneer.)

The Government of India see how necessary is a railway to-Mandalay, and their views may perhaps prove acceptable to-Viscount Cross, backed as they will be by very telling arguments. The surveys and reconnaissances that have been made have showathat the natural difficulties to be overcome are not great: there is one fairly large river just south of Mandalay to be bridged and some heavy embankment work on the low-lying tracts; but there are no ranges of hills of any height to be crossed. The watershed between the tributaries of the Irrawaddy and the Salween is near-Yemethen, and this is only some 500 or 600 feet higher than Nyingyan, so that the cuttings and gradients would not in any case be severe. The line has been fully surveyed northwards from Tounghoo for 60 miles, and southwards from Mandalay for 40 miles to the banks of the Panlaung River at Kyouské. Of the remaining 140 miles a careful reconnaissance has been made from Nyingyan to Yemethen and from the Panlaung River to Waundwin. The short intervening section has also been passed over by railway officers who report favourably upon the line of the country. Practically the alignment of the railway has been made, and if the Secretary of State can be won over, work could be begun next November. With a splendid waterway like the Irrawaddy available for the carriage of plant and material to Mandalay the line could be commenced at its northern point simultaneously with the extension from the present terminus at Tounghoo; and as the total distance to be covered is only 240 miles, two full working seasons should suffice for the completion of the railway. The political effect upon the people of Upper Burma and the Shans on the eastern flank of the line would be very great; it would be an outward and visible sign of the permanence of British rule in Theebaw's dominions, and would materially strengthen our hold upon the country by enabling troops and police to be moved rapibly from point to point at all seasons of the year. For those Burmans who now, in their inabil spite of Lord Kimberley's cautious financial policy, we are convinced that it would be the truest economy to at once sanction such an outlay of money as is required for the Tounghoo-Mandalay line.

MANDALAY.

(Correspondent Madras Mail.) Mandalay is settling down very rapidly, and the principal streets are full of bricklayers, carpenters and plasterers running up much more substantial houses than have yet been seen in this bamboobuilt town. The flood which occurred through the bursting of the big bund is still the principal topic of conversation. Whose the big bund is still the principal topic of conversation. Whose fault was it? How many people were drowned? and so on. It is a curious fact, that all the correspondents have written of the big bund as a river bund. Now, I have the authority of the Myo-woon (Town Magistrate) of Mandalay for giving out that the original purpose of the bund was as a work of desence against the Kalars, the foreigners. The said Woon gets very engry when it is suggested that the bund was made to keep out the river. "Why," he says, "did we make the bund all along the east side of the town if we only wanted to keep out the river? The king heard that the Kalars were coming, and he ordered the bund to be built as a defence all round the town, and that is why there are so built as a defence all round the town, and that is why there are so many indentions in it. These were intended for flanking fire. many indentions in it. These were intended for flanking fire. If the bund had only been meant to keep out the river, it would have been made along the river bank alone, and straight." And, certainly, the Woon should be a good authority, for it was made under his superintendence. He asserts that 60,000 people were engaged on it for eight months. Still, the bund did serve as a defence against the floods, and the breaching of it was a great misfortune. At first it was thought that it was the work of dacoits, but this idea has been quite given up. The flood was almost the highest on record. In connection with this fact, the Woon tells us that there have only been three such floods, and the extraus that there have only been three such floods, and the extra-ordinary part of it is, that they have always occurred when the country was attacked by Kalars. The first, the highest of all, was during the first Burmese War. The second, which did not rise so high as this last, happened when relations with the British were very strained; the flood rose and rose, but matters were settled, and from that moment the waters subsided. The Woon is unable to inform me what political crisis is likely to bring on a

The breach is located at what is undoubtedly a weak and likely place, and was probably helped on by the unseen action of white ants. It is very doubtful whether a stricter supervision could have saved it. The Engineers have an enormous quantity of work to do, and apparently fow trusty subordinates; but careful inspections were frequent, and it is believed all was done that could have been done in this way. As to the number of people drowned, the accounts range between the dozen or so of the official reports, and the hundreds of the newspaper correspondents. believe the former to be nearest the mark. Correspondents of undoubted veracity saw many more bodies, but where they those of drowned people? There must be many deaths daily among a population of 50,000, in what is undoubtedly an unhealthy city; and what did the inhabitants of the partially submerged houses do with the bodies of those who died of fever, dysentery, and other diseases? Not being able to bury them in the usual burial-grounds, which were under water, and unable to keep them beyond a certain time in their houses, there is proof that many of them launched forth their deceased relatives to take their chance on the bosom of the flood, and these were seen, and counted as among those drowned. The Burman is an amphibious creature, and any day one can see young men and maiden, old men and children disporting themselves in the muddy waters of the creeks and rivers, and it is very unlikely that a slowly rising flood would get the better of them, except under exceptional circumstances. To judge by the behaviour of the people, the flood seemed quite a little holiday to them, and the groups collected together, with all their goods and chattels on the bund, the morning after the rise, joked and laughed as if it was a most ordinary and amusing episode. Boats and rafts were made out of all sorts of odd things, and paddling about the Natives seemed to enjoy themselves vastly. The pigs did not like it though. Tuese useful scavengers must have been swept away in large numbers, and many of the survivors are now in a state of starvation. The dogs, too, have had a bad time of it. They seemed to prefer to stick to their houses, and drag on a precarious existence on the roof. I actually saw some good-hearted Burmans going round and feeding these derelicts. But still their life is hardly a happy one, and many a tragedy occurs. A few days ago, a pig and two dogs were seen on a roof occurs. A few days ago, a pig and two dogs were seen on a roof together, glaring hungrily at each other, but apparently keeping up an armed neutrality. Some hours after the observer on his return, saw the same two dogs, now full and bloated, licking a few bones. The roof showed signs of a struggle. There was no pig. The amusements of the place are few. There are several lawn tennis courts, which are thronged nightly, but the only other regular amusement is polo, which takes place twice a week. The ground can hardly be called a good one, and the Burman pony is slow, but the players manage to enjoy themselves, and, after all, that is the great consideration. The Gymkhana blossomed out into a meeting on Saturday, under the auspices of the energetic young Race Secretary. The latter managed to pull off a hurdlerace pretty easily, on a pony belonging to an officer of the Goorkhas, the length of whose legs did not permit of his riding a "lep" the length of whose legs did not permit of his riding a "lep' race himself without much danger of his feet catching in the hurdles. The flat races were won by the Brigade Transport Officer, and the last joined sub. of a line regiment, both riding their own tats. A race open to soldiers produced a large field and many falls, the winner himself performing a neat somersault after passing the post. On the few occasions when the Gymkhana Committee does manage to get up a meeting it is a pity that more people cannot find time to attend. It is hardly encouraging to the Committee, who must be at their wits' end in their endeavours to promittee, who must be at their wits' end in their endeavours to promote sport. Cricket is talked of, but this moist climate is very trying, and seems to take all the backbone out of one. Many gallant officers find that the only thing they are equal to of an evening is the genule art of fishing, and a row of veterans may be observed daily along the most dibbling and sniggling, and apparently catching very little. The most is, however, full of fish, some running as large as 20lbs. or so, and good plucked ones too, when they do so far forget themselves as to get caught. The shooting season (distinct from dacoit hunting) is commencing, and we heard of four couple of snipe being shot by a sporting gunner a day or two ago. The country around is just made for snipe and duck, and we expect to hear of some very big bags this year. The Commander-in-Chief is expected in a day or two. Then, it is said, the fun is to begin. Nous verrons.

SEDITIOUS DOCTRINE.

(Rangoon Gazette.)

We called attention the other day to the seditious doctrine, taught by the Indian Mirror, that Indian troops act "unjustly and unpatriotically" in helping to put down anarchy in Burma. According to this sapient authority, it would be acting a nobler part if they allowed the dacoits to harry inoffensive villagers, to despoil them of their small savings, to violate the younger women, and to set the old ones on fire. The sepoys should thus allow lawlessness to reign supreme in this unhappy country, not because the Indian Government had no right to interfere in Burmese affairs, for it is admitted that it was necessary to put some restraint on Theebaw's vagaries, but because the interference went further than the Indian Native Press approved of. It is the annexation which was the unpardonable sin; and it is that which justifies the dacoits in their cruelty to their own countrymen, and which should make the sepoy unfaithful to his salt, and disobedient to his superior's orders.

The whole argument is the most wonderful instance of wrong premises and false reasoning we have ever met with. It practically makes the Native Press the arbiter of the country's destinies, and the final Court of Appeal on every vexed question; for it reasons that if the constituted authorities do not carry out the behests of the Press, the servants of the State are justified in refusing to obey orders. It puts mercenary soldiers, who have enlisted in an army for the sake of pay, on the same footing as volunteers. The latter, of course, do not volunteer in a cause they disapprove of; but the former are enlisted and paid to fight wherever and whenever required. Of course there are some limits to the violence that can be done even to a professional soldier's conscience, in the matter of the cause in which he is called on to fight; but to some extent he does and must put his conscience in the hands of the rulers of the State, when he embraces arms as a career. The most absurd and false piece of reasoning in the whole, however, is that, supposing the sepoy shares the Indian Mirror's objections to the annexation of Upper Burma, he should, now that it has become British territory, do his level best to make the people as become British territory, do his level best to make the people as miserable as possible by refusing to protect them from the dacoits. They are stricken with grief, according to this theory, at the loss of their king. Therefore it is unjust and unpatriotic of the sepoys to deprive them also of such lively imitations of Theebaw's atrocities, as the dacoits are still prepared to give them.

So much for the Indian Mirror's ideas of justice and patriotism. The same paper, in a violent tirade on the wickedness of the whole proceedings in Burma, recently abused Lord Dufferin for "setting up as a most feeble imitation of Lord Dalhousic," and accused him of being a statesman of "narrow vision, barren imagination, and weak judgment," because he fell so readily in with the project of annexation. This is certainly not flaltering to our present Viceroy; but it is flattering to the mercantile community of Rangoon to suppose that it was the hint of an azitation for separation from India, contained in one of the letters agitation for separation from India, contained in one of the letters of the Chamber of Commerce, which brought the Viceroy and Lord Solisbury's Government to their knees, and made them give in unreservedly on the question of annexation. The passage on this point is worth quoting in full :-

"But our British merchants, both in England and in Burma were determined that they should be secured a free and unrestricted reign of the whole country with its stores of untold wealth, which were to be bartered away for the worthless cloths of Manchester, and the trumpery hardware of Birmingham and Sheffield. So great was the urgency of the mercantile interest for the adoption of extreme measures with Upper Burma, that it was intimated to the Government of India, in the most distinct terms, that if it did not identify itself with the views of the mercantile body, an attempt would be made to sever Lower Burma from India, to whose Treasury that Province was contributing a large surplus revenue, and to press for its constitution into a Crown colony. The menace was not without its effect."

We wish we could share the Indian Mirror's opinion as to the efficacy of a threat to agitate for separation. If Lords Salisbury and Dufferin were impelled by this to go the whole length the Rangoon mechants wished in dealing with Upper Burma, when otherwise they would have adopted a middle course, more acceptable to the Native Press; perhaps in time the same threat will gain for us the right to retain our own surplus revenue. In Bombay they are apparently suffering from the same injustice as ourselves in that respect; and a Bombay paper recently observed that it was time the Indian Government devised a better plan for meeting their deficits than the present very crude expedient of appropriating another's balance.

THE JUBILEE MUSEUM.

(Pioneer.)

Out here we naturally feel that such a scheme claims more earnest treatment than can be embodied in reflections on the Queen's virtues as a domestic example, and the beautiful sentiment involved in drawing closer the ties which unite the mothercountry with India and the Colonies. It need hardly be pre-mised that we do not want to run down the scheme. Something permanent in the way of an Imperial Institute might be a very grand addition to the public buildings of London, and it is even conceivable that it might be rendered very serviceable to India as a commercial exchange, and perhaps as a focus from which true ideas concerning Indian administration might radiate over Great Britain. But to begin with, two ideas are involved in the rudimentary proposal as it stands; and these, though far from being incompatible, are at least separate and distinct ideas. The one is to make the new Institute a fitting manifestation of national enthusiasm for Queen Victoria personally; the second to accomplish certain practical and political purposes relating to India and the Colonies. In devotion to either of these ideas, whichever may be upper ost in their minds, different promoters of the Institute may direct their efforts in very different directions. There is a tendency in this utilitarian age, considering the memorial idea first, to suppress all mero sontimental expenditure in connection with monuments to individual greatness. In former ages of the world-in ages which have bequeathed us some of the most valued tressures of art or architecture that we possess—expenditure on such a purpose was turned, as a matter of course, into the channels of splendid sacrifice. The Taj would probably have been less than it is "a thing of beauty and a joy for ever" if it had been des gned as a charitable institution. Paris would have gone without the magnificently useless arch that crowns the Avenue of the Channel Three of the Three of the Channel of the Chan without the magnificently useless arch that crowns the Avenue of the Champs Elysées if the French people had endcavoured to combine the glorification of Napoleon's victories with the es abitshment, for instance, of an artillery school. Even Charing C oss would have most likely been robbed of its principal adornment it Nelson's memory had been perpetuated by the erection, instead of his column, of a sailor's home at Wapping. The element of sacrifice is an essential feature of a monument that shall worthily embody a sentiment; and directly a building subserves a useful end, people begin to forget the hero or heroine in serves a useful end, people begin to forget the hero or heroine in whose honour it may have been raised.

It would be grievous, however, if we miss the achievement of a monument worthy of the Queen, by aiming at making it serviceable to her subjects, and fail to render it serviceable because it has also to be a monument. Clearly a building that has to be, as the Prince says, "at once a museum, an exhibition, and the proper locality for the discussion of Colonial and Indian subjects," has got to be an edifice on a tolerably large scale. There are buildings about the world which show that great proportions can be combined with architectural beauty, but so far, it seems generally recognised, nothing of that kind has been put up at South Kensington—and such works cost millions! Private subscriptions are hardly likely to build up such colossal figures. A cheap building big enough to include permanent show-rooms for the products and manufactures of the whole Empire, not to speak of accomplishing the vague but expansive purpose of accommodating discussion on Colonial and Indian subjects, will be apt to disappoint the æsthetic and monumental purpose of the Jubilee Institute. But, on the other hand, if the architects are allowed the upper hand and bidden to design a structure to come within so much money, and yet do no discredit to the Jubilee Colonial and Indian interests, will be only too likely to find themselves so little advanced that they might just as well have been left out of consideration from the beginning. Colonial interests—as the experience of the closing exhibition has taught us—like plenty of rom and a free hand, and are liable even then to come to grief in connection with the sale of liquors. Indian interests have learned that they cannot be safely handed over to the care of the author ties in London, whose lealing belief connected with the administrative organisation out here is that it constitutes the earliesce of a telephone and need not be provided, at this end, with a spe king plate. The learned that they suggested so ne notion as to what part the Colonies would want to play in an Imperial Institute, but has scarcely served the purpose even of a rehearsal of the arrangements which would be required to make the Indian section of such an establishment truly responsive to the requirements of this country.

No doubt the Indian officials who have been at work in connection with the Exhibition have been forming conceptions, all this while, of the way in which something might be done by a permanent institution in London to promote the interests they have been endeavouring to represent. But to constitute this a Jubilee monument to the extent that even the first stone of the future building might be laid within the period it is designed to celebrate—the scheme just launched will evidently have to be matured with a rapidity that does not promise well for the digestion of ideas on the subject out here, and their presentation at home with sufficient urgency to secure their fair consideration at the hands of the Institute Commissioners. Certainly there is no particular or special clause on the subject that will leap to Indian lips. We have not been going on in this country for any considerable time under a burning sense of requiring something permanent at South Ken ington. The most urgent wants of India could hardly be made the subject of an Exhibition in London, nor be helped in any way by representation in the show-case of a Museum. Unless British economists come to their senses, indeed, the existing currency of India might perhaps serve no better purpose than to be put away in the vaults of such an institution, while the members of the Secretary of State's Council can generally be relied upon in emergencies to make an exhibition of themselves, though disinclined generally to call in spectators from the outside world. However, if there is to be an Imperial Institute constructed at a vast expense, and in the midst of the emotions due to a record available of the conductive construction are constructed as exceeding and with one clarated as econdary. to a very glorious occasion—and with so elevated a secondary purpose as that of drawing closer the bonds of which we hear so much—it does seem desirable that the undertaking should be carried out more systematically as regards India than the huggermugger makeshift which constitutes the Indian section of the great South Kensington bazaar, the success of which in connection with illuminated fountains and the Band of the 1st Life Guards has inspired the Prince of Wales with the proposal we now have the honour to consider.

THE SAME. (Bombay Gazette.)

The Prince of Wales's letter to the Lord Mayor, suggesting the establishment of a Colonial and Indian Institute in London as a means of commemorating the Queen's Jubilee, has been received with approval—albeit of a discriminating kind—and the time cannot be far distant when it will be necessary to determine what part India shall take in the enterprise. The purpose of the institution is to illustrate permanently and in the centre of the Empire its arts, manufactures and commerce—to perpetuate, in a word, the service which is being done to India and the Colonies by the Exhibition at South Kensington. The imagination of the average Englishman, indeed, has never been so fully impressed with the Imperial idea as it has been by the great show at South Kensington. But it is not necessary that the tamasha-like character of a Kensington exhibition should be retained in order to ensure the continuance of any interest thus exhibited. It can, indeed, be better maintained in the quieter conditions which would naturally prevail in a permanent institution in which it would be easy enough for the Government of India to ensure the adequate representation of every product of the soil of India possessing any possible com-This is one way of enlarging the courses of Indian trade, and Sir Edward Buck asserts that in more than one instance has a good product previously unknown to the commercial world, but as plentiful, choap, and easily procurable in India as it is possible for any product to be, been successfully introduced in manufactures of which the field is very large. It is well that the department of Agriculture in India is in charge of an official who is so sanguine as to the advantages that are to be got from thus advertising the world of the wares that India has to offer to it. For it is that Department, as we understand it, which will be mainly responsible for seeing that the representation of Indian products in the proposed Institution is adequate, that it is kept well abreast of the processes of production in India, and that no new thing that comes within the range of our productive capacities is omitted from the collections. The effort that was made last year for giving India a worthy repressutation at South Kensington was special, and we can scarcely expect that it could be repeated year by year even if it were required. But in all parts of India there are officials who may be trusted to keep touch with any new thing in Indiau arts, or industries, or natural products. Such service as they may be called upon to undertake would properly be under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture, and one important part of it might safely be left to Dr. Watt, whose exertions for the due presentation of the economic products of India at the Exhibition constituted a service to the Empire which it would be wrong to undervalue. The Colonial and Indian Institute will need to be organized in the Colonies and India as much as in London—it is, in eed, in the fear let London influence on its management should too greatly predominate that the chief danger to the project lies—and from what we have seen of the organising power of the department presided over by Sir Edward Buck there is no ground for misgiving as to the way in which the Indian part of the undertaking, at all events, will be accomplished.

BENGAL

COLONEL WILKINSON goes to Calcutta as Commissioner of Police.

Drowning Case at Stlhet.—A Calcutta paper has received some further parciculars of the death by drowning of Mr. William Prentice, a South Sylhet teaplanter. It appears that, on the 29th ult., Mr. Prentice and Mr. W. D. Stewart, another planter, started in a frail and leaky craft to pay a visit to a friend at the Kapnaphar Tea Estate. The jheel was crossed without mishap, but on entering the Jhurie River, and when but a few yards from the bank, the boat filled, and its occupants were thrown into the water. The deceased, who could not swim, sank immediately, and despite the efforts of his companion to save him he was not seen again alive. It was not until late on the following day that his body was recovered, and on the 1st inst. it was interred in the Lungla burial ground in the presence of a number of his fellow planters, with whom the deceased had been a great favourite. The sad event has, it is said, cast quite a gloom ever the whole district.

Hindus and Mahomedans.—Nawab Abdul Latif, whose recent action in securing the suppression of a Bengali drama called The Religious Hero Mohamed is deserving of all praise, sends us a letter, in the course of which he says:—"Babu Guru Dass Chatterji, in whose shop the book was on sale, has forwarded to me 1,729 copies of the book (all that he had in his stock), and given me permission to destroy the same. He has, moreover taken steps to recall all such copies that had already been sold, the number of which he assures me is small; and he has promised to place them in my hands as soon as he gets them back. I will take an early opportunity of destroying the copies of the book in the presence of some of the leaders of Mohamedan society. The publication of this most offensive play and an attempt to have it acted in the theatre have created a great sensation among the Mahomedan residents of the town; and it is highly desirable, in the interests of common good will and peace, that the leading members of the Hindu community should come forward and suppress the circulation of this book, and also of similar other books, one of which, having been put on the stage by the members of the Brahmo Somaj at Dacca, about a month ago, was about to create a serious disturbance between the Hindu and Mahomedan in habitants of that city."

MADRAS.

M. M. VENGATTARAYA RETTIAR, the Mayor of Bahour, a commune or taluq of Pondicherry, has, according to the Madras Mail, been sentenced by the Tribunal of First Instance of Pondicherry to fifteen days' imprisonment, and to pay a fine of 100 francs, for having appropriated certain public property to his own use.

PRIVATES INGOLDSBY and Nash, of the Rifle Brigade, who are charged with the murder of a Native in Bellary last month, are to be sent to Madras to be tried at the next Criminal Sessions.

The Madras Brahmin.—In Madras it appears that it is not only the Mahomedans who are to a great extent excluded from employment in Government offices by the Hindoos, but the lower castes of Hindoos themselves are also excluded by the Brahmins. The extent to which this is the case is shown by the fact that, though the Brahmins according to the last census only amounted to 3.94 per cent. of the total number of Hindus in the Presidency, they filled 75 per cent. of the appointments in the Uncovenanted Service. It is stated that, whenever a Brahmin is at the head of an office, no one except one of his own caste has any chance of obtaining employment.

A CURIOUS INCIDENT.—The Bangalore correspondent of the Times of India, telegraphing on the 15th, gives a brief detail of a curious incident which occurred there recently at an execution. He says:—"A striking and touching incident occurred this morning at the execution of two Natives for the murder of a young man in the Bangalore Fort last July. One of the condemned men, Govindrajulu Moodliar, a highly respectable and educated Hindu, while being tied on the gallows, for some time called on his gods, Govinda and Narraina. Then, suddenly bursting out in English, he exclaimed:—'God give me salvation; God sent his beloved Son into the world to die for our sins. Forgive me for my sins. My God, I am suffering for my former sins.' The bolt was then drawn. This man had been educated in the Wesleyan High School, but had never made the slightest profession of Christianity. Both men protested their innocence to the last, but the evidence against them was very conclusive."

BOMBAY.

It is intended by the leading members of the Native community of Bombay to invite Mr. Ilbert to an evening party on the eve of his departure for England next month. COLONEL LATOUCHE, Cantonment Magistrate, Poona, delivered judgment on the 14th inst. in the assault case in which Captain Hughes was charged with whipping two Parsees. He was fined Rs. 15 in one case and Rs. 10 in the other.

THE Bombay Gazette says:—"Without waiting for the recommendations of the Finance Committee on the subject, the Government" (of Bombay we presume) "have issued a circular to the various departments notifying that in future travelling allowances will be reduced to half the present scale."

A HYDERABAD TRAGEDY.—The Decan Times says:—"A few days since, in the City of Hyderabad, a barber was shaving an Arab when he accidentally drew blood with his razor. The Arab at once closed his fist, and struck the barber a violent blow. Another Arab scated near remonstrated, saying, 'Why do you strike an unarmed man?' On this the first Arab drew his 'jumbia' (curved dag er) and stabbed the man who remonstrated in the stomach, causing the entrails to procrude. The wounded man, though mortally wounded, thrust the entrails back, and, drawing his own dagger, rushed at his adversary and stabbed him fatally before he himself expired."

HYDERABAD.—A Native of Hyderabad, Deccan, writes to a Calcutta paper as follows:—"I am sorry to say that the affairs of this State have gone from bad to worse since Sir Salar Jung's death. Within the short period of three years much of the thirty years' work of the great Minister has been undone. No doubt large folios of printed reports are published and circulated, but alas! all the valuable reforms which they describe exist only on paper. No wonder, therefore, that the administration of this State has fallen into thorough disrepute. The only hope for the State is that the Viceroy will appoint a capable Englishman to take control of affairs. And I believe that the Nizan would be anything but sorry to see an able Englishman as his chief adviser."

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

THE Civil and Military Gazette is authoris d by his Highness the Maharajah of Kashmir to contradict the statement that the Maharajah is dissatisfied with the services of Dewan Gobin Sahar as Prime Minister, and that it is in contemplation to nominate a successor.

THE demolition of the Neill archway was commenced by orders of the Lucknow Municipality. It was stopped by the orders of the Viceroy, pending a reference to the Lieutenant-Governor. We are prepared to learn that the outrage was determined on without Sir Alfred Ljall's knowledgo.

THE property of the Cawnpore Cotton Ginning Mills (a company whose affins have been recently liquidated by order of the Court) was sold by auction on the 11th inst. It was bought for Rs. 50 005 by Chotay Lal Gya Pershad, a banker of Cawnpore. It is anticipated that the shareholders of the original company will get a very small return of their capital, if, indeed, anything at all.

Delhi.—The Delhi correspondent of the Civil and Military Gazette writes on the 12th:— There was a Hindu political meeting last night. The object is unknown; but probably for the suppression of Mahomedans. But it has transpired that they wish to sue Government for three lakhs damages suffered during the riots. When they asked the Deputy Commissioner to protect them after sconing the Mahomedan procussion, he is said to have told them that, as they had taken the law into their own hands, they might defend themselves—hinc illæ lachrymæ. Scores of telegrams were sent to Government, complaining of the Deputy Commissioner's partiality. These are said to have been returned to him revealing the dispatchers. A kitmutgar was burnt death by Hindu sweetmeat makers ladling hot syrup over him. The chief Hindus go about, but the police guard at Nilka Katra continues. The most conspicuous officer in all this has been Inspector Hyde, who deserves the thanks of Government. All is now quiet. The calm way in which the Mahomedans opened their shops after the Mohurrum is remarkable, as if they had quite done with the affair. The Hussars and Borderers are still here."

NATIVE PRESS.

The Muslim Herald, of Madras, writes in the following sensible strain:—"An illustrious example of the vauling ambition of the rising generation of India is found in the vituperative tone of a section of the Native Press which is determined to make a dead set at the British administrative policy in India. Like the fifty on the coachwell these self-styled Native champions of Indian politics appear to say—'See what a dust we make! 'little thinking that their cry is calculated to do more harm than good to those on whose behalf they claim to speak. Like the wild beasts who mock the meat they feed on, these champions mock the nation who licked them into shape and steadiness. But cui bono? Far from securing to the people the privileges which they are now deprived of, and inducing the rulers to look to the important wants of the ruled, it is calculated to create in the minds of the half educated masses, who take the N stive Press for Gospel truth, a feeling anything but friendly towards the ruling nation. The Native Press is yet very young, and has not cut its wisdom teeth. Perhaps the Native Press is yet at the very foot of the mountain, and has not really commenced the ascent; but it is none the less certain that, if its vituperative tendencies are it is none the less certain that, if its vituperative tendencies are tolerated, it may grow too obstinate to bend, and the transition will most assuredly prove from the frying pun into the fire. It is time, therefore, that something should be done to discountenance its present tone." Side by side with the above should be read the following effusion from a "Simla correspondent" which Mr. Malabari published some days ago in the Indian Speciator:—"There are still men in Bengal, who but want leaders to embarrass an army in India. The ryots of Backergunge and Jessore, the Gor Govalas of Nuddea, the Raj Bansians of Burdwan can even wield their clubs and spears to the fullest extent required for guerilla warfare. And supposing, for argument's required for guerilla warfare. And supposing, for argument's sake, that the Bengalis are physically incapable of doing any harm to Government, are they not admitted to possess an intelligence not surpassed by any other race in India? Can they not, like the weak-bodied but strong-minded Brahmins of oll, make themselves the counsellors of the fighting races, and combine a themselves the counsellors of the fighting races, and combine a force, which, by its very number, may prove rather serious?

THE STANDARD LIFE OFFICE'S OFFER TO POLICY-HOLDERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CEYLON TIMES."

Sir,—As we have not previously trespassed on your space in connection with the question raised by various policy-holders in this Company, regarding the currency in which the principal amounts assured under their policies fall to be paid, we trust you will be able to find room for this letter in your next issue. would first mention that, until the question was raised by the issue of the last bonus certificates, in which the principal amounts assured were mentioned as rupees instead of sterling, as in previous cases, neither the Directors at home or here were aware that policy-holders were unconscious of the effect that the proclamation of 1872 had on their policies; and so far as we were concerned this was confirmed by the fact that since that date when policies, the premiums under which had been paid in rupees, have fallen in, the amounts thereof have also been paid in rupees, and accepted without question by the executors of the assured. We must, therefore, take this opportunity of disclaiming, on behalf of the Company, any intention of taking advantage of policy-holders in the matter, or of being actuated by any of the ungenerous motives which we were sorry to see attributed to the Company in some of the letters, &c., published in your paper, and which we trust those concerned may now see to have been unnecessary and un-

We have kept the Head Office fully informed of all that has passed here since the question arose, and we have pleasure in announcing that we are now in receipt of a telegram, replying to a letter we sent home on 10th ultimo, authorising our taking the action which we therein suggested as being a fair solution of the difficulty, viz., that those holding policies dated before 1872 and made out in sterling, but who have always paid their premiums in rupees at par of exchange, and thus, in terms of the proclamation, are only entitled to payment of the amount insured in rupees at par of exchange, can have them endorsed as payable in sterling on agreeing to pay all future premiums in sterling. Should they elect, however, to continue paying in rupees at par of exchange it would be understood that they admit the Company to be only liable to pay rupees at par of exchange on the falling in of the policies. The Company do not intend to ask for exchange on back premiums, so that those electing to have their policies recognised as sterling will practically have been saying exchange over since the fall in the value. tically have been saving exchange ever since the fall in the value of the rupec, and we cannot but think that this concession will commend itself to all reasonable minds as fair and equitable.

There might possibly be individual policies—policies which require different treatment—and we shall be most happy to refer any exceptional cases to the Head Office, and have no doubt what-ever but that the Directors at home will deal with them in the same liberal spirit as they now offer to do with the bulk of the policies effected. We shall probably be in possession of fuller particulars and instructions when written advices come to hand, when policy-holders will be duly communicated with.

In conclusion, we may say that we were much surprised to see from a paragraph in the papers a few days since, that the Committee representing the policy-holders (appointed at the public meeting of the 7th September last) had forwarded a letter to our Head Office without having had the courtesy to send same through us, or even to advise us of their having done so, and to favour us with a copy. We understand this letter, containing the minutes of the meeting of the 7th September and other papers. of the meeting of the 7th September and other papers, was not sent until the mail of 24th September, so that it cannot have yet reached the Directors, or influenced the decision they have arrived at in the matter, but we are none the less surprised that the Committee should have thought proper to thus ignore the Company's local representatives.—We are, &c.,

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE CRUISE OF THE "BLACK PRINCE."*

Books of daring and venture are always welcome. They appeal to the instincts which in bygone times made Englishmen the fore-most race in the world, and though the opportunities for the display of dash and courage are less numerous than heretofore, there is no reason to suppose that the will is wanting because the way is not always clear.

The "Cruise of the Black Prince" carries the reader back to the close of the eighteenth century, when war having been declared against the "Mounseers"—as the sailors dubbed the French—the vessel in question was fitted out as a privateer with letters of marque from the Admiralty. As she hailed from letters of marque from the Admiralty. As she hailed from Liverpool, her captain and one or two others had to come to London en route to the "powers that be," and a chapter proclaims how they were attacked by highwaymen as they journeyed along to the metropolis, for they nearly killed the leader, the well-known Captain Starlight; how they lost a horse in the encounter and seized his; and, lastly, how they were in consequence clapped into gaol as robbers and thieves. However, they managed to explain matters, and eventually getting their papers from "my lords," wended their steps homewards to the Mersey. They had, however, barely started when the redoubtable Captain Starlight again honoured them with a visit—this time not to plunder, but to offer honoured them with a visit—this time not to plunder, but to offer his services as a seaman. So the highwayman became a privateer. In due course, all being ready, the Black Prince started on her errand of slave-dealing, buccaneering, and fighting in general—anybody and anywhere, it mattered not, so long as there was a prize to be taken. Yet, withal, the vessel was but 500 tons burthen, a mere cockle-shell in these days of huge steamers and leviathan traders. Her guns, too, were not as now measured by tons, but by pounds. Still there were stout hearts and skilled hands on board, and the reader will find no lack of stirring scenes, hotly-contested battles, and hard-earned victories. How, too, the mouth of avarice waters to think that in a short cruise of four months no less than three frigates fell a prey to the Privateer, besides other vessels, so that Captain Robert Hawkins, who com-manded the ship, became independent by this single venture. O tempora mutantur! But what is passing strange is that in the days when knocks were numerous and honours scarce the reader parts company with this redoubtable worthy in his capacity of "Sir Robert Hawkins," Knight, Governor of Carolina, while Captain Starlight develops into Sir Roper Trever, Baronet. How this happened is the reader's privilege to discover. Commander Cameron, himself as bold and intrepid a son of Neptune as ever paced a deck, has done his work well. There is a rough-andready dash about all the scenes in every way characteristic of the age when privateering was fashionable, and of the deeds of violence which lent attraction to that path to fame and affluence. As, too, there are seizures of wives, and marriages without end, the tale may be perused with interest by that class of readers who think more of Venus than Mars, and less of courage before the enemy than of deeds of daring in the arena of love.

"HEROES OF SCIENCE" AND "URSULA'S FORTUNE."+

It is not very clear from the preface to what class of readers Dr. Garnett addresses himself in "Heroes of Science.' He claims, in the first place, the merit of "bringing within the reach of every boy and girl material which would otherwise be available only to those who had extensive libraries at their command, and much time at their disposal." Taking this sentence literally, his claim time at their disposal." Taking this sentence literally, his claim is, of course, well founded; but practically it may be doubted whether many "boys and girls" would take an interest in, or in the least degree understand, such abstruse subjects as the "corpuscular and the undulatory theory of light," "the laws of electrolysis," "the creeping of electricity on glass," and numerous other such topics which are discussed in the pages of the volume We are, therefore, cempted to conclude that, as further stated in the preface, he has written this careful and concise compilation for the benefit of students at schools and colleges, where the principles of physical science are taught. From this standpoint the volume is completely successful; it gives sufficient details as to the life of the various great "physicists" to afford interest to a reader, and sketches in outline the great discoveries which have immortalised their names, and left an imperishable renown upon the pages of time. Himself a scientific specialist, Dr. Garnet is well qualified to speak with authority, and explain with accuracy.

The names selected are well chosen. There is Boyle, known as the founder of the Royal Society; Benjamin Franklin, who discovered that lightning was electricity; Cavendish, the greatest "quantitive" philosopher this country ever produced; Benjamin Thompson (Count Romford), the founder of the Royal Institution, who devoted his energies chiefly to domestic discoveries; Dr. Young, the most profound philosopher since the days of Isaac Newton; Michael Faraday, who first turned to account the "electric light;" and, lastly, James Clerk Maxwell, who pursued his investigations in almost every branch of natural science, and avecalled in all of them. Of course other representations, have his investigations in almost every branch of natural science, and excelled in all of them. Of course other names could have been added with ease and no less advantage; but Dr. Garnet could not include in a small work all the names necessary to exhaust the ilis; of "heroes of science;" and we are well assured that his selection is judicious; while his treatment of his subject leaves little to be desired: It is concise, pithy, and withal accurate.

"Ursula's Fortune" is a tale designed to teach the lessons of contentment and effacement of self—lessons which are the groundwork of all true happiness. There is an absence of sensactionalism in this volume, but, nevertheless, the plot is interesting and the characters attractive. Ursula herself is a noble specimen of Eve's daughters, and her "fortune" was not in her face, but ther good deeds and noble actions. We have read this little work with great pleasure; and there are, we fancy, many others who with great pleasure; and there are, we fancy, many others who will do the same.

EVERY GIRL'S ANNUAL.*

"Every Girl's Magazine' is not altogether a suitable designation for the very charming volume which bears that name. We should have preferred some such title as the "Young Ludies' Magazine," because the style of the work is more adapted for young women than girls. It consists chiefly of tales, and less of pictures than is suitable for younger readers, though we gladly avow that the prints are extremely good of their sort, and that puzzles, &c., are calculated to please the junior members of the family no less than the "big girls." Apart from this criticism we have nothing but praise to award. The stories are interesting and instructive, the letter-press is clear, and the "get up" of the volume will stand compare with any rivals. volume will stand compare with any rivals.

"SUNDAY" READING FOR THE YOUNG.

"SUNDAY" READING FOR THE YOUNG.†

By a strange fatality, Sunday—the one day in the week which should be the brightest, the happiest of the seven—passes heavily and hangs on hand. Especially is this the case as regards the younger members of the human family. Why is this? The reasons are manifold—partly religious, partly secular. Without entering upon a deep and learned disquisition upon this topic, it may fearlessly be asserted as beyond the pale of controversy that one chief cause of weariness on the day of Rest is the want of a suitable work to read. We are no Puritans; we do not seek to hamper children in the enjoyment of happy hours and artless pastimes; but we do consider that the mind in its earlier years should be trained to have a reverence for the Sabbath, and what more suitable plan than that the reading should be selected in accordance with the sacred day? This is the key note of "Sunday," the new volume of which now lies before us. Premising that it is designed more for young children than for those somewhat the new volume of which now lies before us. Fremising that it is designed more for young children than for those somewhat advanced in the paths of youth, it leaves nothing to be desired. The pictures are good, the tone of the stories is healthy, the moral inculcated is sound; and lastly, but by no means leastly, there is plenty to interest as well as to instruct. With such a volume it is no fault of the day, no fault of the work, but rather the misfortune of the reader, if Sunday be not as it was meant to be, the happingst the sweetest day of the week brightest, the happiest, the sweetest day of the week.

A COMPENDIUM OF DOMESTIC MEDICINE AND COMPANION TO THE MEDICINE CHEST.

Perhaps few tendencies are productive of more injury to the human constitution than an inordinate love of "self doctoring," and yet, forsooth, no vice is more general, less repressed, or less repressible. In these circumstances a work which must more or less pander to the weakness of the flesh seems to stand selfcondemned; and, indeed, were this the only aspect in which the matter ought to be regarded, the duty of a reviewer would be clear and unmistakable. No condemnation could be too severe no dispraise more well merited. But on reflection it will be seen that there is another side of the question. In the first place, people will doctor themselves, whether it be wise or whether it be foolish; the sun of old women's nostrums will never set, and such being the case, it is obviously desirable that the injury done to the constitution should be reduced to a minimum. to the constitution should be reduced to a infimum. Again, as pointed out in the preface, there are often occasions, especially in country districts, where medical assistance cannot be speedily procured, and obviously at such times a handy work of reference may be more serviceable, even to the extent of saving life. Lastly, there is the care of travellers, who needs must be their own doctor. We gladly, therefore, welcome Sivory's "Compendium of Domestic Medicine," which is so simple and plain in its directions, so completely devoid of technical and high sounding phraseology, that the most unsophisticated reader may comprehend its instructions and digest its teachings.

In addition to the more purely medicinal information contained in this little work, there is, further, a variety of hints calculated to be of service in the ordinary routine of everyday life. Perhaps, however, if we say that the volume is the result of a lifelong experience of one of the first pharmaceutical chemists of the day, and that it has reached its tenth edition, we need add no higher praise.

The "Illustrated Naval and Military Gazette" (W. H. Allen and Co.) for November contains a fair number of interesting articles and some excellent drawings. There is a memoir (with portrait) of the late Sir Herbert Macpherson, and another of Admiral Tegetthoff—a brief but amusing account of Lord Palmerston's little sulphur war of 1840 against King Bombs, told by an actor in Admiral Winnington-Ingram. A description of the Italian navy (with thirteen illustrations) is a careful compilation by Mr. C. J. L'Estrange, who, like his father, Colonel L'Estrange, has done some excellent work for this magazine. Major Walford, R.A., concludes in this number his account of the Parliamentary Generals of the Civil War, and "J. C. D." discourses pleasantly of St. Helena and Hong Kong as he saw them at the Indian and Colonial Exhibition. The editor continues his "National Record of the Victoria Cross," and contributes two articles appropriate to the ordnance scandals matter—one regarding "The Question of Steel Guns for Great Britain," and the other on "Sir William Armstrong as Engineer for Rifle Ordnance,"—dealing with both matters in his own original and incisive style. matters in his own original and incisive style.

"Colburn's United Service Magazine" (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.), now in its fifty-eighth year, has some very readable papers in its November number. Military men will be interested in Colonel Knolly's paper on the mobilisation of the 1st Arm y Corps, and naval men in Mr. Garel's answer to the question, "Are we are dy?" One of the most instructive papers in the contractive ready?" ready?" One of the most instructive papers in the number is that on "Swimming as a Military and Naval Exercise," by Guy C. Rothery, which contains some capital hints and suggestions, which might be taken advantage of by the authorities of both services.

The opening trial dinner of the British Dinner Company, Limited, which offers to the hungry public of humble means a substantial dinner, consisting of either soup or fish, a plate of meat, two vegetables, and bread, for sixpence, was a decided success. The capacious hall at 73a, Oxford street, was well filled on Friday evening last by members of the Press and others interested in the movement. In the absence of the Hon and Rev. Canon Lee, who was to have presided, but who at the last moment was prevented from attending, the chair was taken by Mr. Applegarth, C.E., and an excellent chairman he made. The repast was excellent as regards quality—quantity, cooking, and cleanliness in all arrangements—and if as assured such a dinner is always to be had for sixpence, the retired Indian, military or civilian, whose rupee threatens to approach that figure, will find economy and satisfaction in patronising the place. Short speeches made by the chairman and some of the directors explained the working of the scheme, about which there is no cant of philanthropy, but an endeavour to carry out a practical idea of giving a good cheap dinner to the public and making reasonable dividends for the shareholders. The company promises to be a success in both making the same of the company promises to be a success in both ways.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for the purpose of supplying the public with pure and genuine Ceylon Tea, and to combine with it also the sale of pure Coffee.

It is an undoubted fact that Ceylon Tea is gradually growing in favour with the public, and it is also notorious that comparatively few people can procure it, and those who do cannot always get it pure and genuine. Even Teas sold as Ceylon are in many instances mixed with Chica and Indian; but by those who know what Ceylon Tea is, the very common question asked is, "Where can we get it pure?" As a strong evidence of the high estimation in which Ceylon Tea is held one has only to hear the remarks in its favour by the vast numbers of those who have visited the Indian and Colonial Exhibition, and have had a cup of real Ceylon Tea.

One great difficulty why the use of Ceylon Tea has not been more fully developed up to this time has been the smallness of supplies as compared with China and Indian, but as the production increases, which it evidently will dovery rapidly, it rouders it all the more necessary that the larger supplies should be prominently placed before the notice of the actual consumer, and thus encourage a more general demand.

By therefore introducing channels on an extended sc.le for the sale of the pure and undulterated srticles, a greater demand, it is confidently expected, will be created, as the advantage to the consumer must soon become increasingly apparent, and the favourable position which Ceylon Teas have already communded an thereby scarcely fail to be still further materially enhanced.

The intention is to open a Central Depot or Warehouse in London, and, as opportunities offer, to establish Branch Depots or Agencies in different parts of Loudon and the provincial towns, and to adopt all the necessary sources and means for publicity.

The importations of Ceylon Tea have already amounted this year to seven millions of pounds weight, and with the increasing production promise very soon to reach twenty millions. From all these supplies of the various estates ample opportunity will be afforded for the Company to select suitable qualities, according to their requirements as it is intended to make the entire purchases in the London market from all the importations as brought forward. In adopting this course continued uniformity of each description sold by the Company can thus be insured, instead of depending always and solely on any particular estate, the quality from which may vary season by season.

No other than Ceylon Tea will be bought or sold by the Company.

No other than Ceylon Tea will be bought or sold by the Company.

It would be premature to form any calculation as to the quantity of Tea likely to pass through the Company's sources of disposal, but estimating the amount at on'y a quarter of a million of pounds weight, the profit would amply justify the expectation of a very good dividend.

The sale of Coffee also should produce very satisfactory results.

While the fullest means will be adopted to promote the safe extension of the Coupany's lun-iness, every regard will be paid to avoid unnecessary expense. No primotion money whatever will be paid. Arrangements are already in progress to early out the intentit ns of the Company, so that no time will be lost in the furtherance of its operations.

Tea growers and merchants in Ceylon, and others in this country connected with the Ceylon trade, have been invited to take an interest in this Company, and thus assist in promoting its success.

Prospectuses, together with Forms of Application for Shares, may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, 13, Great Tower Street, London, E.C.

WITHOUT indulging in any extravagant ideas, there seems no reason why the Company's sales should be limited to the moderately-estimated amount of a quarter of a million lbs. annually, and if the profits be calculated, even at a considerable reduction, on the basis of those stated by "Stocks and Sbares" of the 16th instant, they would still yield dividends which may be variously estimated from 20 to 30 per cent.

THE NATIVE PRESS OF INDIA.

THE Administrative Report of the Presidency division of Bengal for the past year has just been issued, and in it occur the following remarks on the Native Press of Calcutta:—

Of late years there has been a considerable increase in the number of newspapers published at Calcutta. These newspapers circulate in the provinces, and the number of readers is increasing with the advance of education. The tone of the Press, as reflected in the Native newspapers, has been generally antagonistic to the legislative and administrative action of the Government. The expedition to Burma and the annexation have been the subjects of specially hostile animadversions. The rancorous antipathy to the European community, which has been a marked feature for some years past, has not abated. It seems to be the deliberate aim of the writers to excite and keep alive feelings of hostility to Europeans. Every crime with which a European is charged is accepted as true, and as typical of the conduct of Europeans generally; and if an inquiry proves it false the newspapers continue to assert its truth, and declare the decision to be only the result of the gross partiality of the Courts, impugning alike the provincial tribunals and the High Court.

We have more than once touched upon this unpleasant topic, but not with any view towards recommending that harsh or repressive measures should be taken by the Government against Native editors or proprietors. Whether the false and seditious writing complained of be a necessary result from the introduction of English ideas of liberty into India, or whether it has had its origin in the flabby and foolish system of English education which we have offered to the youth of Bengal, it matters little The evil has been done, and by ourselves. We have raised against us not quite a monster of the Frankenstein type, but a very disagreeable object nevertheless. But it did not come into existence yesterday, and it seems a little after date for official attention to be called to its evil doings now. The "rancorous antipathy" to the European community in general, and to the British Government in India in particular, has been from the beginning the marked characteristic of the Native newspapers in Bengal. But much of this hostility is like the English education of the Bengali Bakú himself-greatly vencer. He does not mean to use daggers, although he is fond of writing them. And so long as the papers which indulged in this kind of tall writing were few in number, and contemptible in circulation, it was perhaps wise on the part of the Government not to give them undue importance and influence by noticing their sedicious and aggressive effusions. An official translator was then employed, who collated the various paragraphs, and these were sent to the English papers in India and embodied as the "Spirit of the Native Press." But for some unexplained reason the authorities put a stop to this arrangement, and the vernacular chullitions were kept as secrets in official archives, the English Press seldom taking the trcuble to have them translated for their Things have changed considerably now, own purpose. for education has been spreading over India without unfortunately spreading with it a better feeling or better manners. Amongst Native journalists English rule and English character come in for the same kind of abuse as that originated in Bengal when full freedom was given to the Press, and liberty was mistaken for license by our Native friends. In giving expression to discontent, and calling all acts of the British Government into question, the Native writers have of late obtained assistance from quarters from which at one time they never expected it. But now there are Englishmen in England who do what little there is in-their power to make English rule in India difficult and distasteful. Without experience of the country itself, and without any intelligent, honest sympathy with its peoples, they are ever ready to encourage them to agitate imaginary grievances, and to represent themselves as slaves writhing under the tyranny of an oppressor. Careless of truth and devoid of patriotism these charlatans of the hour are trading upon the innocence or credulity of ignorance, or joining hands with the really disloyal and seditions. Against them the Government of India is powerless, and it would suit no good purpose to help them into notoriety here. The solution of the difficulty is with time, which in the end makes all things even. The English official in India, whether of high or lowly rank, must be content to labour and to wait. Contentment and gratitude are not plants in Native soil, which grow up like the prophet's gourd in a single night. Aware of his responsibilities, and anxious to fulfil them with all the anxiety of an English gentleman, with whom the word "duty" is the watchword of honour, it may be disappointing and heartbreaking to see evil so often returned for good, to find calumny and misrepresentation where confidence and kindly feeling were looked for. But he must accept his fate, being content to sow good seed, though others are to reap the harvest. The good, like the truth, however, is great, and will prevail; and however discouraging to-day is the tone of the Native Press the hope need not be lost that the gentle and enlightened rule which England is endeavouring to afford to India will ere long be recognised by the millions of that Empire as wise and beneficent, and win the gratitude of generations to

INDIAN POLICY-HOLDERS.

With reference to the agitation which has been taking place in Ceylon regarding the action of the Standard Life Assurance Company in the matter of paying Bonuses or Policies in sterling when premia have been paid in rupees we have received a statement from the head office of that Company in Edinburgh to the following effect:—

"With reference to the recent discussion as to payment and collection of Promiums under certain of this Company's Indian Policies, the Board of Directors have resolved that in the case of Rupee Policies opened in India prior to 1876, the option of the place of payment on the claim falling due, and of the currency in which payment is to be made, shall be allowed to the assured on the understanding that the Premiums shall be paid in future according to the currency selected, the option to be made before payment of the Premium next falling due. In the event of no option being declared the Policy will remain a Rupee Policy, the Premiums being payable in the same currency. Bonuses in all cases will follow the currency of the sum assured. In the event of Sterling payment being selected no demand will be made for difference of exchange on back payments, the Company waiving all such claims.

"In all Policies issued since 1876 the place of payment is definitely determined, and no question can arise in connection with them.

"The Policies at present being issued are in Sterling with Sterling Premiums, or in Rupees with Rupee Premiums, according as the Policy-holder may elect at the date of effecting the assurance."

We think that the Company has acted wisely and in its own interests in thus meeting their clients, whose temper—especially those in the "spicey" atmosphere of Ceylon—will, no doubt, now be calmed down, and the ugly charges made in "hot haste" be withdrawn and forgotten.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

BRIGADIER GENERAL McQUEEN has been confirmed in the command of the Punjab Frontier Force, Sir Charles Macgregor having finally vacated the appointment owing to ill-health.

Colonel Collen has succeeded Colonel Newmarch as Secretary to the Government of India in the Military Department. Who will replace Colonel Collen as Military Accountant-General is not known, nor has yet been considered.

COLONEL DE PREE, Surveyor-General of India, has applied for six months' extension of furlough, and does not purpose returning to India. This should confirm Colonel Thuillier in the appointment at the end of that time, assuming that Colonel de Prée retires then. In August next, at any rate, his retirement would be compulsory under the fifty-five years' rule.

COLONEL H. A. BROWNLOW, R.E., Inspector-General of Irrigation in India, vacates his post next month on promotion to Major-General. He will be succeeded by Colonel R. Home, R.E., now in charge of Irrigation in the Punjab. Major F. J. Home, R.E., of the North West Provinces Irrigation Branch, will probably be transferred to the Punjab.

THE undermentioned officers return to India by permission of the Secretary of State for India:—Colonel Browne, Chief Engineer and Commissioner for British Burma, Brigade Surgeon Hunter, Surgeons Monk, and Captain Hay, 1st Lancers.

Tué demand for field hospitals has been so great of late that it has been found necessary to provide further field hospital equipment. The field hospital equipment for Quetta must always be available for service, as that is an important post; so also at Meean Meer, Allahabad and Calcutta should the equipment for the control of the contr ment be always available for the divisional manœuvres. The requirements of the stations in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies are not pressing, and can be supplied hereafter on the return from Burma of the field hospitals prepared in and sent from those Presidencies for the troops on field services in that country.

The Pioneer says:-It is understood that some important changes and reforms will be shortly announced in the organisation of the Native army, the principal points being that the infantry is to be organised in linked regiments of three battalions each, the battalion at regimental headquarters thus acting as a reserve to the battalion or the battalions in the field. Coupled reserve to the battain of the battains in the held. Coupled with this change will be the introduction of a reserve, which, however, in the first instance, will be limited to the Bengal Infantry, and be on a small scale. The term of service for earning good-conduct pay is shortened; the half-mounting rate is increased by a rupee, and the time of service for ordinary pension is considerably reduced, the present invalid pension being abolished prospectively.

A MADRAS paper, in an article on the officering of Madras Native regiments, says :- The system of recruiting officers for the Staff Corps is a weak point in the military administration. It answers in peace time, but the moment a great war were to break out the recruiting field, viz., British regiment, will be closed—a contingency which is not provided for at all, and then would arise the question from whence officers for Native regiments are to be obtained. Setting aside the Sikhs and Gookhas, who are Bengal troops in name only, the ordinary Bengal, Madras, and Bombay sepoy requires leading, and with British efficers to show the way he may be trusted to follow.

CATTAIN SPILBURY, R.E., has arrived at Simla in connection with the scheme for the defences of Bombay.

THERE are not many general officers in the British servicefor the matter of that in any other service—who are capable of performing the feat of pedestrianism done by Major-General Hugh Rowlands, V.C., C.B., last week. The General visited Mysore city for the Dassorah, and, instead of returning by rail, made up his mind to walk back to Bangalore. Myeore is distant eighty five miles by road from Bangalore, and the General covered the ground on foot in two days, turning up at Ballaboovil (his residence in cantonment), as fresh as ever.

OBITUARY.

DEATH OF MR. DALY.—After lingering for nearly a week Mr. Daly succumbed to the injuries he received on October 21st in the Bombay Polo Tournament. He never regained consciousness for more than a few moments at a time, and growing gradually weaker expired. This sad occurrence will be growing gradually weaker expired. This sad occurrence will be widely lamented, and especially throughout the Indian Army, in connection with which his father, General S.r Henry Daly, rendered distinguished service to the Empire. The deceased, Mr. George Kirpatrick Daly, was born on the 18th August, 1857. He joined the army just after attaining his nineteenth year. He was first attached to the 6th Dragoon Guard, and a year later joined the 15th regiment. He was admitted to the Bombay Staff Corps on the 3rd June, 1878, having obtained his Lieutenant's commission in November previous. In October, 1879, he received his first. November previous. In October, 1879, he received his first appointment to the Central India Horse, and became Staff Officer in November of last year. At the time of his death he was Squadron Commander of the 2nd Regiment. Lieutenant Daly, whose promising career has been so sadly terminated, saw service with the Central India Horse during the Afghan and Kandahar campaigns of 1879-80, and wore the medal with two clasps as well as the bronze star. He was engaged in the operations around Cabul, took part in the action at Charasiah, and was in the memorable march from Cabul to Kandahar, as well as in the battle which relieved the city. For his gallantry he was mentioned in the despatches.

THE death is announced at Hyderabad, at the age of seventyfour, of Mr. Bowen, a gentleman who took a prominent part in Hyderahad affairs for many years, and who is best known as the late Sir Salar Jung's tutor and private secretary. Mr. Bowen was the son of Colonel Bowen, C.B., who commanded the 4th Madras N.I., and who distinguished himself in the first Mahratta War. He commenced life in a banker's office at Madras, and his first connection with Hyderabad was in the capacity of manager of the Residency, to which post he was appointed through the instrumentality of Mr. Dighton. He was subsequently appointed secretary to Suraj-ool-Moolk, the well-known minister, and, in addition, was entrusted with the English education of the minister's nephew, young Toorab Ali Khan, who is better known to us as Sir Salar Jung. When Sir Salar Jung was appointed minister, Mr. Bowen became his secretary, and he continued to be his mentor and confidential adviser until he retired in 1876. Mr. Bowen conducted all Sir Salar Jung's correspondence for him, and we are told by the Secunderabad paper in an interesting memoir of the deceased, that the great minister trusted him implicitly, and used to say that Mr. Bowen was the only man whose papers he could sign without reading them. Sir Richard Temple congratulated the late minister on having a secretary who had brought the Secretariat to the high pitch of respectability it had attained. Sir Richard Meade held that during Mr. Bowen's tenure of office, the relations between the two Governments had been of the most satisfactory kind. Mr. Cordery considered that Mr. Bowen had rendered valuable services to both Governments at a critical time. The Ameeri-Kabir, co-regent, with S.r Salar Jung, disapproved of the retired to the rendered services. ment of Mr. Bowen from office, as he considered that with him the happy results of the work by which these dominions were benefited would cease. In 1876, Mr. Bowen retired from his appointment and was succeeded by Mr. Oliphant. He retired on a bonus agreed upon by the co-regents, Sir Salar Jung and the Ameer-i-Kabir, as due to him for the very valuable services he had rendered to this Government during his long tenure of office-

A CORRESPONDENT writing from Upper Burma says :-- "Anyonn who might happen to travel on the Irrawaddy into Upper Burma, if possessed of the faintest commercial instinct, could not fail to be struck with the vast importance of this mighty trade highway which is now monopolized by the Flotilla Company, the success of which in these days of monetary depression ought to skeenly stimulate the attention of capitalists. As Burma is capable of maintaining an agricultural population at least five times as great as its present one, and as the peace and security of its inhabitants, not taking into account the present temporary and trifling disorders, is secured under our beneficent British rule, it trifling disorders, is secured under our beneficent British rule, it offers an immense field of enterprise to the trader, who will require steadily increasing facilities for the carrying of his rice and other country products. Considering the great strength of the opposition that would be offered to a rival by the present Company, I am led to believe from discussing the subject with various experts, whose names I do not wish to use for obvious reasons, that the safest way for a new company to start would be as their own carriers, their steamers being supplied, until they had firmly established their footing, by their own local agents, the determination of whose number and scope would be but a matter of detail. The working of this idea, which has been thought out detail. The working of this idea, which has been thought out and approved of by iar wiser heads than mine, will afford a vast fortune to those who have the money, knowledge, and enterprise to convert it into an accomplished fact. It would greatly simplify matters if we could but know at what premium it would be possible to buy shares in the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company."

THE MAHARAJA OF CASHMERE has authorised a Punjaub paper to contradict the statement that he is dissatisfied with the services of Dewan Gobind Sahai as Prime Minister, and is thinking of nominating a successor. As far as his Highness is concerned, he has "no intention to replace his present Prime Minister."

Now that silver threatens to become a drug in the market it has been suggested that Anglo-Indians should discard electro, and take to their former friend, who now threatens to desert them. Those who can afford to do so and have a liking for old plate (gold, of course, for preference) will find a card just published by Mr. F. Osborne, of 25, Poland-street, a very useful guide. It is a simple and comprehensive "Table of English Plate Marks," from 1558 to the present time, showing the leopards' heads, lions, shape of shield, &c., compiled with great care from the best authorities. It will be found of great service to connoisseurs, collectors of plate, and the trade generally.

LIFE OF

SIR HENRY RAEBURN, R.A.

With Portraits and Appendix by his Great-Grandson.

WILLIAM RAEBURN ANDREW.

Even to look and handle this volume is an enjoyment—nor is the fair ext mal promise believed by its contents. This brief memoir of the most eminent Scottish portrait painter is agreeably and profitable reading.—Whitehall Review.

This book is the first separate "Life of Raeburn," and bosides being a good sketch of his cereor as far as it goes, cont.ins a list of his works exhibited in Edinburgh in 1876.—Contemporary Review.

Mr. Andrew writes about "the Reynolds of the North" with all that zealous warmth of aptreciation which is due from a Scotchman to a Scotchman, a warmth which grows still more fervid when its object is an ancestor.

Athenæum.

Mr. Andrew does justice to the manliness and amiability of Raeburn's character, and gives us some delightful glimpses of his intercourse with many of the great Scotsmen of his time.—Scotsman.

VERSES:

TRANSLATED AND ORIGINAL.

H. G. KEENE,

Author of "Peepul Leaves," "Under the Rose," &c.

"Mr. Keene has not, we believe a great reputation in England as yet, but in India he seems to be well known."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Mr. Kene's is no untried hand. Well known as a poet in North-Westorn India, in this volume there is nothing to gainsay his right to the name. . . Often sweet and graceful always vigorous and thoughtful, his verses possess the true lyric swing."—Queen.

- "He has a gift of sweet and pathetic expression which endows his lyrical efforts with a charm and freshness quite their own."—Home News.
- "We thick Mr. Keene is at his best when original and prefer the latter half of the book to the translation with which the first part is filled."—Oxford Tatler.
- "It is impossible to avoid being struck, not only with their beauty and tenderness, but with the fact that thoy are almost throughout in a minor key. . . . Very sweet, very beautiful, but very sad."—ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.
- "To our mind Mr. Keene's original verses are more likely to bring him fame and give his readers pleasure. There is always point and interest in them, even in the shortest.".--LITERABY WORLD.

OPINIONS.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C. in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

BROAD / ARROW

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE.

ESTABLISHED 1833.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

'The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its corre pondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette "circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marino bureaux of the Fren3h, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng'and regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the neople of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthly (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian oeople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally decile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 29th October; from Allahabad and and Madras to the 27th October; and from Calcutta to the 26th October.

THE news from Upper Burma does not indicate any improvement in the condition of the country, though some districts in which dacoity prevailed are now said to be less disturbed.

CAPTAIN STEVENS, commanding at Tammu, has attacked and destroyed two strong stockades in the Kubo Valley. Our casualties were Captain Briscoe, slightly wounded, and five Natives killed. The dacoits lost eight men killed, and many wounded.

THE Government are actively engaged in negotiations with the Shan chiefs, with a view of inducing them to acknowledge our authority.

Mr. R. H. PILCHER, who was shortly to proceed on a mission to the Shan States, has died at Kyoukse of rheumatic fever.

An expedition starts for the ruby mines early in November. Little resistance is expected.

In Ningyan the dacoits are becoming more audacious. They have looted the mail proceeding to Yemethen, killing all the Native escort.

THE dacoits threaten with death any pilot working on the Irrawaddy mail steamers.

According to official news only two or three dacoities occurred at Mandalay, Ava, and Shwebo, during the week ending the 17th inst.

SAGAING and Ningyan continue to be disturbed, but the Yen district is quiet.

THE VICEROY'S visit to Goa has been cancelled owing to the death of the wife of the Governor-General.

MR. W. S. WHITESIDE, third member of the Madras Board of Revenue, has been appointed a member of the Viceregal Legislative Council.

THE prospects of the cotton crop in the Bombay Presidency are generally good.

A serious rising of the tribes at Ghuznee, in Afghanistan, is reported.

THE earnings of the Indian railways during the first half of the current financial year have risen from Rs. 7,91,00,000 to Rs. 8,32,00,000. The expenditure, however, has advanced from Rs. 3,82,50,000 to Rs. 4,33,00,000, and the net earnings have therefore fallen off by about seven lakhs.

THERE has been a falling-off of 50 lakhs in the circulation of Government money paper in 1885-86 as compared with the previous year.

Before leaving the Hyderabad Residency, Colonel Ross expressed his warmest thanks to Mr. FitzGerald and all the Residency officials for the cordial and efficient cooperation they have afforded him during his tenure of office as Officiating Resident.

THE NIZAM'S P.W. Department is to be reorganised in the month of December next for the sixth time in eight years.

In is believed that work on the Bengal-Nagpore Railway will be commenced during the cold weather.

News from Nepal states that Kaku Maharani, widow of the notorious Nana Sahib, Raja of Bithhur, diel at Khatmandu on the 2nd inst., aged forty-five years.

A GENERAL Order by the Commander-in-Chief repeats the well-known fact that Government troop traffic has priority over all other traffic on the guaranteed railways.

In a Resolution, dated the 13th inst., the Government of India sanctions the admissions of superior officers of the Indian Telegraph Department to the benefits of the Provident Fund which are now enjoyed by civil members of the engineer and superior accounts establishments of the Public Works Department on the same terms and conditions.

THE total exports of tea from Calcutta during this season amount to no less than 31,910,601 lbs., as against 29,379,611 lbs. at the same date in 1885, and 26,114,990 lbs. in 1884. In September the exports to Great Britain were 12,634,831 lbs., while the trade with America showed a small decrease. The Ceylon trade is also making rapid progress, the exports up to the 30th ult. being nearly double those of last year.

DURING the year ending the 31st March a sum of Rs. 1,41,615 was collected in the Madras churches for charitable purposes.

Notes of the Week.

A TELEGRAM from Bombay dated yesterday states that Lord Dufferin was ill, and that he was unable to receive a deputation of Native Chiefs who desired to wait upon him. His Excellency's health has not improved in India, and the hard work, travel, and mental worry which he has had to undergo lately would have severely tried a stronger constitution. A later telegram will, it is to be hoped, bring the news that there has been complete recovery from his present indisposition.

As we stated last week Sir C. Arbuthnot succeeds to the Madras command, and the Duke of Connaught to that of Bombay. It is understood that his Royal Highness will not remain for any considerable time in India, but will probably return to England to be present at the Jubilee celebration next year. The abolition of the Presidency commands as existing at present is said to be one of the strongest economical recommendations of the Finance Committee, and will certainly be carried out. There are, however, difficulties in the way of bringing together the armies of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay into one military organisation, which are outside the question of finance, and which require careful consideration. It is easier to destroy than to create efficiency.

In all the papers received by the present Overland Mail, there are laudatory notices of the late Sir Herbert Macpherson, doing justice to his great merits as a soldier and commander. But one correspondent writes that it should not be forgotten how excellent a general he was in peace:—

Sir Herbert Macpherson's aims and tastes were all of a practical character. What he looked to was the health of the troops first of all, and then such matters as better clothing for the men and better food for the animals. He did not thrust his views on these points down the throats of others, but looked after them himself in his own unostentatious, practical way. In the hottest of the hot weather he would leave the station for days, with no camp to speek of, in search for his desired sanatarium in the Rewah hills, or to look over a promising grass range. Discipline was maintained without friction, for no one under his command found himself needlessly interfered with, either in work or play; and with his personal kindliness and geniality to all it was no wonder that he was popular.

The method, reported by wire, as having been adopted by an Afghan general of conveying intelligence of a victory by sending ten cartloads of the heads of his enemies to Cabul, created of course some indignation and comments amongst critics who do not understand the ways of Oriental warfare. Afghan generals are not yet skilled in despatch writing, but the prompt dispatch of even one cartload of heads to the Ameer would have told our amiable ally as much as he would expect to know of a successful encounter. The arrival of ten cartloads gave evidence, of course, of a very great triumph quite sufficient to justify the illumination of the city of Cabul. But, alas! for the pride, pomp, and circumstance of war, it turns out, -after all, that the victorous general did not take the heads of his enemies. He only took their uniforms and their money. Even then, according to the latest telegram, he showed extraordinary chivalry for an Afghan warrior only those who resisted were killed.

Our friends of the Peace Society continue to forward to us printed slips from the office of the Herald of Peace and International Arbitration, begging for the insertion of the same in our columns. But in expressing our inability to comply with their modest demand we have no desire to be bellicose. They have lately taken Mr. Labouchere as their mild exemplar, and have reprinted one of his peaceful diafribes from Truth, in which he explains the position of India with regard to an attempt of Russian invasion:

There are three routes to India: one by the Cape, another by the Mediterranean, and another by Asia. The last is practically an impossible one for an invading army, and probably we should be far better off with a civilised neighbour than without one. The Mediterranean route would be useless to us in case of war, for we could neither send troops nor commerce by it, as it is flanked by the Mediterranean Powers. Remains the Cape route; this we hold absolutely, and shall hold so long as we have the command of the sea. Let us, therefore, at once clear our heads of the Mediterranean route being of any use to us. If we do this it will be obvious that whether Turkey belongs to Austria, Russia, or to the Sultan, is a matter of absolute unimportance to us, whilst our countries of Fernet is a positive degree to us for if whilst our occupation of Egypt is a positive danger to us, for if we were at war we should have to hold the country by means of an army, and we should not have the soldiers to spare.

It is often pleasant and sometimes profitable to read Mr. Labouchere in his own paper, but to accept him as a peace-maker—or a politician to be followed—is a little difficult, even with the recommendation of the eminent Society which is no v trying to disseminate his views.

A FINANCIAL organ of the City publishes a paper regarding the ruby mines of Upper Burma, which professes to have been written by "One who has been there," and the views expressed are, of course, opposed to the action of the Government of India in having, as it is said, granted a lease of the mines to a private individual or The writer says :-

It seems impossible that the Government or anyone else can have any data, trustworthy or otherwise, on which to form a reliable estimate of the value of these mines. All that is known is that rubies are found there, but to what extent neither the recent owner, King Thebaw, nor any of his Ministers could give an opinion. Every ruby found was supposed to be brought to the spalace at Mandalay, but the mines are situated in one of the found was supposed to be brought to the spalace at Mandalay, but the mines are situated in one of the found was supposed to be brought to the spalace at Mandalay, but the mines are situated in one of the found was supposed to be brought to the spalace at Mandalay, but the mines are situated in one of the found to the spalace at Mandalay but the mines are situated in one of the spalace at Mandalay for the spalac parts of Burma where the most deadly form of jungle fever is prevalent. It is certain death not only for a European, but for any Burman not a native of the district to reside there. The mines, consequently, were worked solely by the few inhabitants of the district—all attempts at superintendence being utterly impracticable—and consequently the amount of rubies forwarded to the palace was what the miners calculated to be just enough to keep the King in a good temper, and prevent his issuing an order for the crucifixion of one or two of their number. Such being the case it seems to be prima facie, incredible, either that the Indian Government can have been so ill advised as to grant, or that any sensible commercial firm can have incurred the risk of taking, a definite lease of these mines; unless, indeed, the Government has been so utterly inapt as to give a long lease for a long term of years, in which case the lessees might have a chance before the end of the term of recouping the losses which they will certainly incur at the commencement. One of the reports affoat, viz., that the lease has been granted to a nominally Eng-dish, but a really French politico-commercial firm, whose objects sequently, were worked solely by the few inhabitants of the district dish, but a really French politico-commercial firm, whose object are political rather than commercial, is so little creditable to the perspicacity of the Indian Government that it must be rejected, in the absence of positive evidence, to the contrary as untrue.

The information given by the supposed traveller is not much. It would seem to be more of a "feeler" than anything else—written with the hope that Mr. Streeter or somebody" in possession of the facts will explain. Then there might come a "boom" in ruby mining companies?

INDIAN LIFE POLICIES.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I am glad to find that our old representative has taken a new lease, and that you, Sir—who I have not the pleasure of knowing—recognise the fact that we want ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL to be in the future what it has been in the past, the friend and supporter of the interests of the old Anglo-Indian. There are many questions that require restricting that require restricting the transport of such great moment to tions that require ventilating, but none of such great moment to ourselves and our families as that of Indian Life Policies; first, as to whether sterling payments are held as discharged in India on payment of ten rupees for each £1 sterling; and, secondly, whether our sons and daughters cannot insure in some sound office whose rates are equitable, not prohibitive.

I am sorry to say that the so-called Indian Insurance Offices appear to be in a muddle, and do not exactly know the position they hold towards the Policy-holders. I went the other day to an office with a friend of mine, and the Secretary seemed puzzled when the question was thus put:—"I have paid the office in India when the questionwas thus put:—"I have paid the omce in India regulary for fifteen years, regarding the payment in rupees as equivalent to the £1 sterling; since I have retired from the service I have paid in English money. What amount will my children receive when I die?" This was a poser, and I have been promised an answer. The present prohibitive high rates should at once be inconired into I am seventy for years of age: two of my cousing inquired into. I am seventy-five years of age; two of my cousins died in their eighty-fourth and eighty-fith year, and I know several others who have reached a patriarchal age. At the present time India is a very different place to what it was even forty years ago. The mode of living is less luxuriant, the laws of application are better understood and all statistics show that India sanitation are better understood, and all statistics show that India is almost, if not quite, as healthy as many of our other Colonies.

I am putting myself in communication with several Insurance offices with a view to ascertain if the present exorbitant high premiums cannot be reduced, and those offices who respond to my views I shall ask you to publish the names of.

Insurance offices in times past refused to pay the medical referee. The late Mr. Wakley, M.P. for Finsbury, took up the question, and, as the Insurance offices gave in their adhesion to question, and, as the insurance omces gave in their adhesion to his suggestion that medical referees should be paid, he published the names of the offices in the Lancet, resulting in every office recognising the value and importance of a medical man's knowledge. On similar lines, how gladly will old Anglo-Indians scan the list of Insurance offices who are prepared to treat Civilians and 'Military officers belonging to the Indian office on fair terms instead of the present preposterous high terms. ALLEN'S INDIAN instead of the present preposterous high terms. Allen's Indian Mail, by giving publicity to the names of such offices, will be fulfilling one of its most important functions—that of protecting the Anglo-Indian both at home and in India—and will earn the gratitude of all classes belonging to the Indian Service.

A RETIRED ANGLO-INDIAN.

Asia Minor, W., November 13th, 1886.

THE IMPERIAL HAND FIRE EXTINGUISHER.—EXTRAORDINARY THE IMPERIAL HAND FIRE EXTINGUISHER.—EXTRAORDIVARY AND SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENTS.—On Friday last a series of experiments, to show how rapidly fires could be put out even when they had obtained a fair hold, took place in the presence of a large number of persons and representatives of the Press, English, American, and Colonial. The site of the experiments was on a vacant space of ground on the Thames Embankment, adjoining the City of London School. The first experiment represented the side of a room built of pine painted over with pitch and filled the City of London School. The first experiment represented the side of a room, built of pine, painted over with pitch, and filled up with lathes, shavings, paper, and the whole well sprinkled with petroleum. In a few minutes after the match was applied the whole became a blazing mass, and the spectators had to retire some distance. On the signal being given the operator in charge threw a couple of the Imperial Hand Grenades, which totally extinguished the fire in about a second of time. It was admitted by all present that the result was most satisfactory. The next experiment was almost similar, the fire being about half the size of the previous. Here one Imperial Grenade at once put the fire out. Other experiments followed with the same results. The Imperial Grenade for celerity in extinguishing a fire has surpassed all previous similar appliances. The importance of having some ready means at hand to put out fires in large builtings, such as theatres, barracks, &c., at once commends itself, and there can some ready means at hand to put out fires in large buildings, such as theatres, barracks, &c., at once commends itself, and there can be no question if the Imperial Hand Fire Grenade were introduced into India that the fires in barracks and bungalows there which so frequently occur, and with such destructive results, could at once be checked by these grenades, and a considerable amount of property saved. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales was so satisfied with the experiments he witnessed at Norwich that he ordered the grenades for the stables and other buildings at Sandringham.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.) (Times Correspondents.) INDIA.

CALCUTTA, Nov. 14. The Viceroy, after leaving Lahore, proceeded direct to Ahme-The Viceroy, after leaving Lahore, proceeded direct to Ahmedabad, where he arrived on the evening of the 6th inst. His visit to that city was marked by no public function beyond the presentation of an address by the Municipality. Lord Dufferin, on the plea of fatigue, refused to receive another address, prepared by a small body of Natives, praying for the removal of the Income-tax and a reduction in the public expenditure. The Viceregal party went on to Baroda on Monday, being received in great state there by the Gaekwar and the Resident. Monday afternoon was devoted to the exchanging of visits of ceremony. It was remarked that when the Gaekwar called, the Viceroy advanced to the edge of the durbar carpet to receive him—an honour accorded to only a few of the greatest feudatory princes. honour accorded to only a few of the greatest feudatory princes. In the evening the city was illuminated. On Tuesday morning the Viceroy opened a new hospital, which, at the Gackwar's request, is to bear Lady Dufferin's name, thus commemorating her efforts to ameliorate the condition of women in India. The her efforts to ameliorate the condition or women in lindia. The party then drove to the palace and inspected the State jewels, which are estimated to be worth four millions sterling. A review of the Baroda troops followed, with a procession of State elephants and a display of the famous gold and silver guns.

In the evening the Gaekwar entertained the Viceroy at dinner, and in proposing his health expressed pleasure at this, the first visit of any Viceroy to Baroda. Never before had that city processing a representative of the gracious joyed the opportunity of receiving a representative of the gracious Sovereign the jubilee year of whose reign was soon to be solemnised, and who was one of the most fortunate, glorious, and beneficent rulers the world had ever seen. The greatness and unity of the British Empire had just been signalised in London through the exertions of the Prince of Wales; and he wished Borndon while he was the state of the Prince who had visited Borndon while he gratitude the name of the Prince, who had visited Baroda while he

(the speaker) was a boy.

The Viceroy, in reply, alluded to the air of universal prosperity which characterised Baroda and the surrounding districts, the which characterised Baroda and the surrounding districts, the happy and contented appearance of the people, and the marks of conscientlous and intelligent administration. They confirmed him in the opinion that the Gaekwar was one of the most promising, high-minded, and wise rulers with whom India had ever been blessed, and that in him the Queen-Empress possessed a noble Arkani-Daulat, a firm and trusted pillar of the State. He has want on to express his thanks for the magnificant recention. then went on to express his thanks for the magnificent reception accorded him.

On the same evening the party left Baroda, arriving in Bombay on Wednesday, and at once embarked in the Government steamer Clive and proceeded on a short cruise. The ostensible object of the cruise was the enjoyment of snipe-shooting at Viziadroog, but the real object is believed to have been to visit King Thebaw at Rutnagherry. To-morrow will be spent at Poonah, whence at Rutnagherry. To-morrow will be spend at the Viceroy goes to Hyderabad.

One of the severest cyclones of recent years passed over Madras were blown down in all parts of the city, on Tuesday. Trees were blown down in all parts of the city, and many of the streets were blocked, some thatched buildings and many of the streets were clocked, some thatched buildings were destroyed, roads were washed away, and the public gardens were damaged. There does not appear to have been any loss of life. The ships in harbour were obliged to put to sea. The mail steamer Ballarat, which arrived during the storm, could not enter the harbour, and had to put back. She returned on Nednesday, and owing to the roughness of the sea was unable to Wednesday, and owing to the roughness of the sea, was unable to continue her voyage to Calcutta till Friday. The railway line to Bombay was breached in two places, and the telegraph line was blown down.

The composition of the proposed Public Service Commission has been severely criticised since the names of the members were announced a week ago. The general impression appears to be that the proportion of covenanted civilians is too large, that the selection of Native members, with perhaps two exceptions, is not happy, and that there was serious omission in not providing any nappy, and that there was serious omission in not providing any representatives of the higher branches of the uncovenanted service, such as the Education, Scientific, and Financial departments.

The eight sales of Bengal opium which have taken place this year have resulted in a deficiency of Rs. 20,36,090 as compared with the estimate; but the proceeds of the pass duty on opium exported from Bombay are Rs. 22,16,500 better than the

Mr. Ilbert left Bombay yesterday. Before his departure a deputation of Natives presented him with an address. Mr. Ilbert, in reply, said that his brief stay in India had given him a deep and abiding interest in the welfare of the country and the people. He left India with sincere regret, and it would be his dearest wish that he might be able to forward the interests of that great country.

BURMA.

RANGOON, NOV 12. The insurgents in the Upper Province are showing considerable activity. In the course of a skirmish at Tontatin, a village to the north of Moutshobe, Lieutenant Balfour, of the Princess of Wales's Own (Yorkshire Regiment), was killed and several men were wounded while attacking a stockade. Our cenvoys in the Tsagain district are much harassed by the rebels. Yesterday the large village of Mingoon, on the eastern bank of the Irrawaddy, opposite Minhla, was attacked by dacoits, and more than 100 houses were burnt. The villagers, although badly armed, defonded themselves. defended themselves.

Mr. Tucker, Commissioner for the Mingyan division, reports that Brigadier-General Lockhart yesterday attacked the Kymandine Prince's forces, posted one march to the west of Mingyan, and defeated them, capturing some elephants. While leading the attack, Lieutenant Eckersley, of the Prince Albert's (Somersetshire Light Infantry), was killed. The Kymandine Prince

In Lower Burma a gang of dacoits has appeared in the Pegu district, and is giving some trouble. The condition of the Shwonygween district, south of Tounghoo, and of the Tharawaddy district, north of Rangoon, cause uneasiness, as it is believed that there will be a renewal of the disturbances which prevailed in those districts during the last dry season.

The Rangoon newspapers call attention to the general preva-lence of dacoity in Lower Burma. This state of things is mainly due to the inefficiency of the police, which causes much dissatisfaction. A thorough reform of the police system is required, which it is hopeless to expect until some Indian officer of experience and ability is appointed to command the force in the Lower Province. A marked improvement has already resulted in the police force in the Upper Province since Major Daly, late commandant of the Burma Valley force, was placed in command

Lieutenant Fryer, of the 18th Bengal Infantry, at the head of eighty riflemen, lately proceeded to the relief of the loyal Woon at Myo-gyee and found a force of 1,000 rebels strongly stockaded there. After an hour's severe fighting, however, the village was carried, Lieutenant Fryer being wounded and three Sepoys killed.

The rebels lost sixty killed.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

ECONOMY IN HIGH PLACES.

(Madras Times.)

Not long ago our readers' attention was drawn in these columns to the unsparing retrenchments effected in the allowances granted in Russia to Royal Dukes. The circle of those who should receive such allowances was considerably contracted, and the allowances themselves were reduced by no less than 25 per cent., or threequarters of their present dimensions. The reduction which the quarters of their present dimensions. The reduction which the Finance Commission are reported to have recommended in the salary of the Governor of the Presidency of Fort St. George is a reduction of only 10 per cent., viz., from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 9,000. But the public will be grateful for even this amount of reduction; for they will remember the loss by exchange, which makes even the Rs. 16,000 a month now received by the Governor a salary of less value in sterling money than was received by his predecessors; so that any little sum which his Excellency, Sir M. E. Grant Duff, could not find occasion for spending in this country, and, therefore, not to be wasteful, may have stowed away in an old stocking, to serve against a rainy day in Eng-land, will shrink to far less, when he gets there, than the same amount would have done had he been Governor ten or twenty years ago. If every Governor of Madias is bound in honour to take back with him to England a certain minimum amount of savings under pain of being thought to have lived the life of a prodigal and wasted his substance in riotous living, poor Sir profigal and wasted his substance in riotous fiving, poor Sir M. E. Grant Duff must have been hard pressed to effect economies in the expenditure of his salary and allowances, to enable him to take back to England the sum in  $\pounds$  s. d., which would exonerate him from such a charge. Fall in exchange being considered, the proposed reduction in the Governor's salary, reckoned according to what he will be able to take home in sterling money, must be according to what he will be able to take home in sterling money, must be reckoned to about equal to a reduction of 25 per cent. on the salary and allowances of Madras Governors ten or twenty years salary and allowances of Madras Governors ten or twenty years ago—that is, supposing the expenditure in this country to have been on the same scale. In days when exchange was at par, the salary of a Governor was equal to £12,000 a year; at the current rate of exchange the proposed reduced salary will be equal to £7,644, a reduction of nearly 36 per cent. Yet, when we consider the great fall in the prices of European goods since that time, and the increased rapidity and facilities of communication with England, the reduction is greatly mitigated. But taking the proposed salary the reduction is greatly mitigated. But taking the proposed salary of the Governor of Madras, and comparing it with the salaries of statesmen in Europe who stand near thrones, even the reduced salary of a Madras Governor is not to be despised; and we have an attraction to statesmen in England, Peers as well as Commoners. The £7,600 and odd of salary attached to the Madras

Governorship does not cut a very poor figure when compared with German official salaries. The Iron Chancellor, Prince Bismarck, receives only £2,700 a year; and General Moltke £1,500 a year, with apartments and rations for six horses; so that, if the Madras Governor were paid at this latter rate, he would, for the whole five years' tenure of office receive but one years' salary according five years' tenure of office, receive but one year's salary according to the proposed reduced rate. We need not fear, therefore, that the reduction will keep away statesmen or noblemen from the southern satrapy of India.

But it is not only salary that the Governor of Madras receives; he has allowances also, to enable him to entertain, and to keep an establishment suited to his dignity. It is possible that this an establishment suited to his dignity. It is possible that this fact may have been forgotten by the people of Madras during the last five years. But they cannot easily have forgotten that, over and above the stipulated allowances, the little annual trip to the Hills and back has cost the State a considerable sum. This is not an absolutely necessary journey; indeed, it is not only unnecessary, but injurious and costly, besides rendering the salaries of all the higher officials who indulge in it unjustly exaggerated as it compensatory for the endurance of haydships in a hot as if compensatory for the endurance of hardships in a hot climate. We might compare, with great disadvantage to the Indian higher officials, the self-denial of President Cleveland of the United States' Republic with the exaction from the Madras Revenues by the official dignitaries of this Presidency, of the annual cost to the Hills and back. American papers mention, as a good feature of character, that President Cleveland was offered a free passage in the special train that conveyed him and his suite from Albany to Washington, but chose to pay his own expenses rather than accept the gratuity. In India, on the contrary, that would probably be regarded as indicative of a soft head, if not an ignoble mind, wanting in receptivity, and unable to rise to the occasion. It is impossible that a man we obegan life at sixteen as shop boy in a grocery store on a salary of $2.10 a year, and then rose to an errand boy, copyist and lawyer, should have the same thoughts and feelings in a matter of this kind as cultured gentlemen, who, having achieved an European reputation, come to rule the gorgeous East. Besides, the United States Government is Republican, and that accounts for men of no academical culture climbing to the highest places, and taking with them the narrow ideas and circumscribed desires proper to the poor, and indeed ornamental to poverty. But India is Imperial and wealthy.

"BURMA FOR THE BURMESE." (Rangoon Gazette).

Our Mandalay correspondent, in his letter published on Friday, remarked:—"The Government are acting wisely in discouraging the importation of Indian labour as much as possible." If this merely means that for a short time, and until everything possible has been done to induce the natives of Upper Burma to take to honest labour instead of to dacoity, Government will take no active steps to encourage immigration, we think that our correspondent is quite right in saying that it is a wise step on the part of Government. But it is a new phase of the pernicious, "Burma for the Burmese" fad, and if it is to be continued for any length of time we were to see it is a rise of the milder fall of the second of the pernicious of the per of time we protest against it as a piece of the wildest folly. The race distinctions which have been drawn up by the Local Administration here have worked nothing but mischief. educated Burmese lads have been put into responsible posts in the police and the subordinate magistracy, when more capable men of other races were willing to serve on similar pay. With a very few exceptions, the Burmese have proved themselves as yet uufit fo. such posts; and Oo Kha Gyee, the model Honorary Magistrate from Rangoon, has been kind enough to give Sir Charles Bernard an apt illustration of the truth of the old proverb about setting a beggar on horseback.

We may be unduly suspicious, but, with Sir Charles at the head of affairs in Upper Burma, it is impossible to rest quite easy when any race distinction is hinted at on the part of the authorities It looks as if all the rude lessons which have been given lately by Myokes joining the dacoits, police officers abandoning their arms to the dacoits, &c., had only produced the effect of turning the philo Burmese enthusiasm of Sir Charles into a new and even more pernicious channel. To give an undue preference to Burmese in the subordinate ranks of the Government service was bad enough; but, after all, its chief evil effect was on the Burmese themselves, as it tended to puff them up with absurd conceit, the sort of pride which is the certain precursor of such downfalls as that of Oo Kha Gyee. To the rest of the inhabitants of the Province it merely meant that they did not get the best value for the money they paid in taxes. To the poorer classes, especially in the agricultural districts, it probably meant occasional oppression also; but to the merchants, and to all those who by private enterprise in any direction are developing the resources of the country, it was not a matter of very vital moment, except in so far as the incompetency of such officials increased the discognization of trade and scripulture which to some extent was organisation of trade and agriculture, which, to some extent, was a necessary concomitant of the expedition to Mandalay.

But any permanent discouragement of imported labour into

Upper Burma would be a very much more serious evil to the enterprising, industrial classes, who are the real backbone of any country It would be a fatal barrier to the rapid development of the province, for we may be sure that if labour in Upper Burma is to be protected by the discouragement of coolie immigration all the evils of dear labour under which we still suffer here, and by which this province is kept back so much in spite of free im-migration, will be felt with tenfold force in the new province. There, as here, the country is under peopled; vast tracts of fertile land are unoccupied; the mineral wealth of the country has scarcely been touched; and, in a word, the crying want of the scarcely been touched; and, in a word, the crying want of the whole country is a more industrious people, and very many more of them. At present labour in Upper Burma is cheap, and the Burmese are, as a rule, willing to do coolie work, which their neighbours here would not look at; but this difference between the two parts of the country is simply due to the different systems of Government for the past thirty years. In the one part the benighted folly of the Burmese kings killed all industrial enterprise until at times the wretched records could correctly get food. rise, until at times the wretched people could scarcely get food. Under the sting of hunger the Burman will of course work, and work hard. Hunger is a stern schoolmaster, and under his teaching all laziness and nonsensical pride rapidly disappear. But it is perfectly certain that after the country has been a short time under British rule hunger will cease to be an ever-present and all-convincing incentive to work on the part of the people there, as it has for so many years past ceased to be an incentive here. The Upper Burman will wax fat and kick against manual labour, as the Lower Burman has done; and no keeping out of Indian coolies will serve to keep him at coolie work. On the Indian coolies will serve to keep him at coolie work. On the contrary, it will rather increase the evil, for it will force all employers of labour to pay the Native labourers any terms they choose to ask.

We do not believe that Sir Charles Bernard can scriously contemplate any such scheme as the permanent exclusion of Indian immigrant labour from Upper Burma. Even if he did do so the scheme would certainly collapse before long from the preposterous rates the Government would find itself compelled to pay for all public works, if from no other cause. We doubt very much whether the cheap and abundant Burmese labour which does prevail now will last long enough even to complete the Mandalay railway. Once the country is fairly settled the Burmese will probably prefer to settle down to agriculture on their own account, and it is certainly much better for their own interests and for those of the country at large that they should be growing grain to be carried on the railway than that they should be helping to make the line itself. What we fear is not a carrying out of a system of protection of indigenous labour to its final absurdities; but we do fear that a misconception as to the true causes of cheap labour in Upper Burma, aided by Sir Charles Bernard's laudable, but often mistaken, pro-Burman zeal, may give rise to an interference with the labour market, which can but lead to erroneous impressions and to much mischief. We are as much the friends of the Burmese as anyone can be, but we are convinced that for them, as for anyone else, the true road of salvation lies in a fair field and no favour, whether the competition be for Government service or for coolie labour, or for any other kind of

(Englishman.)

One day or another, says the ingenious M. Ernest Feydeau, in his vivacious, if not statistically veracious, book on Algiers, banalité régnera sur l'incommensurable ennui." To parap To paraphase where translation is difficult—commonplace will conquer, and undeviating dulness rule supreme vulgarity, he cries, in the face of the vanishing Oriental picturesqueness of Algiers. M. Feydeau was a globe trotter of artistic tastes, an amateur of pretty faces and quaint architecture, and the changes he records and luments are chiefly those which lie within his own peculiar field—the conventional character of modern buildings, and the insipidity and vulgarity of social observances which vainly ape a civilisation unintelligible to Oriental minds. It is difficult to resist the conviction that if Sainte Bueve's ingenious pupil had visited India in search of picturesqueness and pretty faces, he would have changed his sky and not his mind, and would have lamented, here as there, that Western conquerors, instead of absorbing into their own natures the gracious tranquillity and repose of the Oriental life, the languorous leisure of the golden East, have imported into Eastern habitudes the hideous hurry of money-grubbing, and buildings of the railway-station order of archi-tecture. And would he not say of us, as he says of the French in Algeria, that, if the country were to pass into other hands, the material survivals of a foreign rule would, perhaps happily, be as perishable as they are unpicturesque?

The most important feature in M. Feydeau's argument, however, lies in his echo of Mr. Cotton's complaint that the European among Asiatics is a bird of passage, a sojourner whose "heart untravelled fondly turns to" home, and calculates its passagemoney and its pension rather than its opportunities of making the life of exile a source of sweetness and light. "Almost all of them," he says, with pardonable despondency, "in spite of the softness of the climate, the brilliancy of the sky, the charm of the landscape and the facility of living boye one all processing the landscaper, and the facility of living, have one sole preoccupation, that of returning to the mother-country." The nostalgie must, we fear, be admitted. Which of us, however wedded to Indian ways, however habituated to the observances of bearer and khitmutgar, would not willingly stroll down the sweet shady side of Pall-mall, or watch again the long procession of carriages by the sad sea-waves at Brighton? But is this harmless and inevitable desire so great an evil, so greatly productive of other evils, as Mr. Cotton and M. Feydeau would have us believe? Experience shows us that we cannot colonise India any more than the French can colonise Algeria. And though few of us now a days share honest Joe Sedley's love for kibabs and pillaus, and though the smoking of the meditative hookah by a modern Collector would probably secure to the rash practitioner of Eastern rites some social obloquy, are we really more of a bane and abomination to the patient layat than our predecessors were? Even in the palmy days of Haileybury Civilians, the best administrators were not those who yielded to the insidious influences of Oriental languor, only roused into fitful activity by chicane and intrigues, but mon like Met-calfe and Elphinstone, who managed to combine a sympathy for exotic habits of thought and speech with a sturdy independence and honesty which is not always characteristic of the best of Bengali babus. That there has been a change in the relations of Europeans with Natives few will care to deny; but it is surely rash to assume either that the change has been all on the one side or that it has been all for the worse.

It is true that much of the old obsequiousness to the official European has disappeared, and it would be absurd to resent that inevitable change. And there has come about a period of transition in which the intercourse between the two races has not comfortably defined itself. The change has affected not merely the relations of Europeans to Indians, but of Indians among themse'ves. "Old times are changed, old manners gone," and many Hindu patriarchs must be puzzled with the altered aspect of young India. Need we take it for granted that it is for us to alter our bearing and demeanour; that it is we who show an ungracious reluctance to accept and foster the aspirations of young India? Perhaps it may not be an unmixed ill for young India to find its hopes regarded with a wholesome scepticism, and to be even subjected, upon due occasion, to an ordeal of laughter which is not necessarily ill-natured. Ali Baba has said with characteristic exaggeration that the babu cannot laugh. Is it not a fact that young India, especially as represented in its strenuously serious newspapers, takes us a little too much in earnest, is apt to take offence where none is intended, to assume hostility where none can possibly be felt? It is to go beyond the mark to stamp us all with a character of brutal indifference, and a sordid lust for rupees to be spent in an ill-earned retirement. Perhaps, in due time, the babu will become more cosmopolitan, more apt to recognise a common human nature in all varieties of mankind, to believe less implicitly in plausible Radicalism, to find that the maxim of live and let live has two sides. Of course Mr. Cotton can do no harm in reminding us, too, that courtesy and forbearance will bear kindly fruits even when applied to youths who have abjured the manners and faith of their forefathers, and have not yet devised eclectic fashions and philosophies of their own. Doubtless shoe questions and hat questions would find an easier solution if we were given to cultivate a more good naturel sense of humour amid

THE MINERAL RESOURCES OF BURMA. (Rangoon Times.)

Official utterances anent the mineral resources of this province have been found so often unreliable, that, without much hesitation, we take up the subject of gold in Burma, especially now that Upper Burma is ours. There is very little doubt that, geologically speaking, this country has been shamefully neglected. We stand greatly in need of a thorough geological exploration of the country, and particularly of the mountain ranges that form the backbone of the whole tract from that part in which the Indian and Chinese Mountain systems meet, through the length of Burma and Malaya to Singapore. It is true we have had surveys by the geological department, and there is in existence a very learned compilation yclept "the geology of Pegu," still what has been done in this direction is very little compared to what needs to be done if the country is to be thrown open to private enterprisa and capital. Only one of the fair provincial divisions has been investigated, and, with a result so miserable, that beyond a few theories of doubtful value and only a rough classification of a small number of deposits, nothing else has been made public. Some time back the Akyab littoral was examined, on its being urged that coal existed in the district, and the upshot was a confident declaration that nothing beyond "pockets" of lignite and anthracite existed, and that such fact was strong evidence against the existence of extensive coal formations. As to the Tenasserim division—a mining geologist travelled over parts of it in a hurried way, and, no doubt, under instructions, left a record that would be prohibitive of all enterprise in the direction of developing the rich mineral resources of that part, only that people know better than to trust such official statements.

The discoveries of coal in Henzada and the neighbourhand, and the striking of oil in extensive fields in Arakan, ought to encourage geological exploration in the country. Madras, too, is not without her lessons. Not very many years back it would have raised a smile of incredulity had prospecting of gold been proposed with reference to the Blue Mountains, or the establishment mooted of gold mining industry in the Wynaad. Yet to-day gold is a great fact in the southern presidency, gold mining companies are working there most profitably, and the local papers are talking of the Viceroy visiting them with a view to judge whether India has it not in her power to remove the present crisis in the matter of exchange, by pouring out her gold stores on the markets of the world, and thus once more raise prices and bring up silver to the old rates of 1 to 15 instead of, as now, 1 to 19.

A HUMAN SACRIFICE IN RAJPUTANA.

(Pioneer.)

It would seem hardly credible that, in the days when civilisation has made such strides, human sacrifices should still obtain in a country like India. But such is apparently the case, judging by what has recently taken place in a village in Tonk territory, in Rajputana; and while reflecting with horror upon the tragic scene enacted there a few weeks ago, it is impossible not to admire the extraordinary courage, self-denial and forethought of the two heroines who formed the centre of the tragedy. They were not drugged; there was no show, religious entnussasm, or music to stimulate them to the deed they committed; and the absence of each of these incentives makes their act the more remarkable.

Some years ago, in the outlying district near Neemuch, an interchange of detached villages took place between the Mnairwara and Tonk Durbar with a view to simplifying boundary matters. In the process a Mhairwara village, innubited entirely by Brahmins, passed into the possession of the Nawab of Tonk. This village had been granted in perpetuity to the Brahmins by a former Maharana of Oodeypore, and it is believed that the fact is duly recorded upon a copper tablet which forms the proprietary sunnud in those parts. The grant was of the nature known as maafi: that is, the holders of the soil could till it and enjoy its produce free of rent, though they were not the actual proprietors of the land. The grant, of course, was a religious bequest much after the manner that church grants are with us; but a nominal fee of its. 12 was paid annually to the Durbar for protection. After passing into the possession of Tonk, the idea of levying revenue rates suggested itself to the new authorities, and from time to time an assessment upon the crops was made, which eventually amounted to over Rs. 500 annually. Successive deputations of the villagers proceeded for four years to Tonk to lay tucir case before the Durbar there, but without effect. The copper sunned was shown, but their petition was rejected, and every other effort that these poor people could devise was adopted without satisfactory result. A few weeks ago, upon the ripening of the rain-crops, the Tonk district authorities sent a paper to assess the village, and it soon became known to the Brahums that there was absolutely no hope of any remission of their burden. Some differences had arisen between the revenue assessors and the villagers, and the feelings of the latter were evidently strained to the highest pitch of despair, for, on the morning that the measurements of the crops commenced, the Brahmins assemuled, and it was decided by all present—women as well as men—that there was nothing left for them to do to move the Durbar except the awful sacrince of life known as Johur. The object of Johur is best illustrated by the Scriptural quotation:—"It is good that one should die for the Three men and four women presented themselves to be burnt as willing sacrifices. But the women would not near of any man dying, and it was decided that the sterrice should be confined to the four females. The wood and flax were collected and the pyre prepared immediately this resolution was taken and the victims had selected themselves for death.

At the last moment two of the women became frightened and withdrew, no opposition whatever being offered. The other two victims bravely went to their death. Just as the flames commenced to envelop them they exhibited the most extraordinary of those characteristics to which we have alluded, for, addressing the bystanders, they called to them to send their sons to cut off their hands before they were consumed, and to send these to the proper tribunals as ghastly proofs of the occurrence, for otherwise, they said, it might be believed that their asnes were not mingled with those of the burnt wood. The sous, who were present, at once stepped forward, the hands were held out, and three were cut off. A few minute later the women had been sacrificed. While the cremation was in process, several of the Brammins gashed themselves with knives and scattered their blood on the fire.

All that we have related above in regard to the meeting and subsequent sacrifice happened about uniday, and in the space of two hours. The revenue officials of Tonk were engaged in measure-ing the crops at the time, and on hearing of the preparation for the Johur they fled, there being too tew of them to admit of interference, and, moreover, the villagers having assembled to keep them off if they attempted it. An inquiry is now being held at Oodeypore, where the villagers afterwards presented themselves, bringing the charred hands with them in conformity with the wishes of the unfortunate victims.

EMPLOYMENT OF MAHOMEDANS. (Pioneer.)

The Government of Bengal, having consulted its officers on the subject of the larger employment of Mohamedans in the public service, has just issued a Resolution in which it emphasises the necessity of impartiality in the distribution of appointments. Something more than the convenience of the moment is to be considered; and while the efficiency of the public service is always to be first regarded, places of amplument are to be so distributed. to be first regarded, places of emolument are to be so distributed that the depression of a numerous and influential class will be prevented. The Lieutenant-Governor goes so far as to say that prevented. The Lieutenant-Governor goes so far as to say that in offices were there are at present no Mahomedans whatever employed, the controlling officers must "procure suitable candidates" and secure their fair treatment after appointment. These are very laudable sentiments, and they will, we hope, be cordially endorsed by every officer in Bengal, even though the carrying out of Sir Rivers Thompson's orders may involve extra trouble and work. It is absurd to suppose that in a Province like trouble and work. It is absurd to suppose that in a Province like Bengal, which contains some eighteen million Mohamedans, there are not many more eligible for Government employment than the few score who are now engaged. The returns show how completely the Hindus have hitherto occupied the field. In the 24-Pergunnah's Revenue establishment the proportion of Hindu clerks and other employes to Mahomedans is 209: 6; and the proportion is similar in Burdwan, Hooghly, and elsewhere. In Jessore, where the Mahomedan population is largely in excess of the Hindu, there are only nine Mahomedans employed in offices subvidinate to the Judge as against 110 Hindus: while in Calcutta right to the Judge as against 110 Hindus; while in Calcutta itself there is not a single Mahomedan clerk in the Custom House, or in the offices of the Shipping Master, the Inspector-General of Jails, and the Stamps and Stationery Department. It is very obvious from this that a strong trades-union spirit must exist among the Hindus, which has probably been unwittingly fostered by easy-going officers given to considering merely that "convenience of the moment" to which the Lieutenant-Governor refers. It is quite true that the Mahomedans as a body have for many years failed to avail themselves of the advantages offered by English education; but we cannot believe that this will altogether account for the small number of appointments which they hold. In Behar some time ago it was found that almost all the retty posts under Government were held by Bergalis, the plea put forward being that suitable Natives of the province could not be got; but on the Lieutenant-Governor firmly declining to accept such an excuse a revolution at once took place. All the vacancies as they occurred were filled locally, and it is admitted that this has increased both the efficiency of the public service and the popularity of the administration. The Mahomedans in Behar have now a fair share of the loaves and fishes which the State has to give; and if their interests are duly regarded a similar satisfactory state of things should now be brought about in Bengal proper. As we noticed some months ago, the wealthier Mahomedans are bestirring themselves in the matter of high English education for their sons at the Universities, and the same is said to be the case as regards secondary education a'so, so that candidates for employment should be forthcoming in abundance. If the local Government insists on its latest orders being duly respected, we shall in a few years' time cease to hear of Mahomedan disabilities.

LADIES' CRICKET MATCH AT SIMLA. (Pioneer.)

Annandale has lately been the scene of a novel cricket match, when a team of Simia ladies tried conclusions with a like number of gentlemen, the conditions being that the latter should bat, bowl, field, and throw left-handed, and should use broomsticks in place of bats. The game was watched with much interest by a large number of speciators, His Excellency the Viceroy and His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, with a party from Vicerogal Lodge, being amongst the visitors to the ground in the afternoon. Thanks to the kindness of Lieutenant-Colonel Walker, the Volunteer Band was in attendance, and played during the

Mrs. Webster the ladies' captain, having proved successful in the toss, decided on taking the innings, and deputed Mrs. Irwin and Miss Colvin to commence the batting. To them were opposed Messrs. Durand and Cunningham, the former bowling underhand and the latter somewhat eriatic round arm. The first wicket fell with the total at 0, but, on the arrival of Miss Tribe, runs began to come apace, the third wicket falling for 9. Mrs. Tufnell was bowled for a single, and Mrs. Webster was most unfortunately out the second single, and Mrs. Webster was most unfortunately out the second ball she received. Miss Harris then joined Miss Tribe, and a tremendous stand was made, the former keeping her wicket intact whilst Miss Tribe hit the bowling all over the field. During the partnership the total was carried from 13 to 48, when Miss Harris was bowled for a patiently compiled 4 (all singles). Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Buckland failed to score, and Miss Tribe was soon after well caught and bowled for an admirable 34, made without a chance. Her runs comprised two 4's (sccred not from the bat, but through the injudicious use of the right hand by certain gentlemen in the field), one 3, eight 2's and six singles. She was warmly applauded on returning to the Pavilion. The end now soon came, Mr. Durand bowling five wickets in his last nine balls for no runs. In the entire innings his analysis reads: 10 wickets for 13 runs. Several bowlers were tried at the other end, the least successful being Mr. Younghusband, who bowled five wides in the first over, and was then removed.

With a score of 50 against them the gentlemen commenced their essay with Messrs. Durand and Deighton against the bowling of Mrs. Webster and Mrs. Tufnell. The first stand occurred when Mr. Deighton and Major Bartholomew got together, and the score was carried from 14 to 43. Some idea of the nature of the ladies' bowling may be gathered from the way in which the latter was disposed of, as will be seen in the score appended. When stumps were drawn the gentlemen's score stood at 103 for eight wiskets, but had time armitted a second invited the score appended. eight wickets, but had time permitted a second innings being played there is no telling what might have been the ultimate result. It will be noticed that there is an entire absence of catches during the gentlemen's innings. The following are the

Many military officers at home are exercised in mind by the recent order which forbids officers and soldiers from expressing their opinions "anonymously or otherwise" in the press upon matters under discussion. With unconscious irony, military officers, under all kinds of noms-de plume, have incontinently rushed in to express their opinions upon the order itself. But the question is, perhaps, of more importance to military officers in this country, whose connection with the Anglo-Indian Press—itself of necessity largely concerned with purely military matters—is much more frequent than in England. The order need, however, cause no very great inconvenience either here or at home. No officer, hitherto, whose spirit has moved him to indite of things unpalatable to his superiors, has been accustomed to affix his name to his literary outbreak; and the authors of the order in question must be sanguine indeed, if they think that so palpable a scarecrow will terrify that wily, irrepressible bird, the palpable a scarecrow will terrify that wily, irrepressible bird, the anonymous correspondent, who is always picking holes wherever he can get his ink-tipped beak in. Or even suppose the whole service suddenly smitten with conscientious reverence for an order which the authorities cannot enforce, and refraining by mutual accord from converting their grievances into journalistic prose; there are always substitutes at hand, in the shape of amanuenses, friends, or wives. Supposing even further that the order appeared to all ranks so sacred that no such artifice could be employed, yet a man with a grievance can talk, and talk he will: and it would be a wise headquarters that should devise a dam through which some currents of the torrent of fault-finding speech would not filter into the Press. Then the position of affairs would be that military men of all ranks with grievances—and few are without them—being denied the safety-valve of the correspondence columns of the press, would simmer to the boilingpoint of discontent: while the press, denied the advantage of mature professional opinions upon matters under discussion, would get them somehow secondhand, aggravated by enforced would get them somehow secondand, aggravated by enforced silence and magnified in passing from tongue to tongue; and the last state of military matters under discussion would be considerably worse than the first. There is no need, however, for such doleful forebodings. The effect of the order must be, as a little consideration ought to have shown its authors, and as the discussion of the order itself by military correspondents in the have a papers proves almost impresentible. home papers proves, almost imperceptible.

BENGAL

A CALGUTTA paper announces the sudden death of Mr. Henry Gillon, C.S., acting Judge of Faridpur, which occurred on Oct. 21st. The deceased joined the service in 1871, and was one of the Bengal officers who volunteered for service in Madras during the Bengal officers who volunteered for service in Madras during the famine year. The heavy work and exposure in Madras are said to have brought on a severe attack of fever which seems to have had a lasting effect on his constitution. He suffered much from recurrences of fever, and it was an attack of this illness which proved fatal in the end. The deceased was an officer of great ability, and, in the epinion of those who knew him well, was destined to rise to a high position in the Service.

At the Calcutta High Court on Monday last, before the Criminal Vacation Bench presided over by the Hon, the Chief Justice and the Hon. Justice Beverley, in the course of the arguments in a case before their lordships, the counsel in arguing for an acquittal pressed the argument that because of the discourse of crepancies in the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution, the jurors who tried the case should not have credited the witnesses. The Chief Justice, in reference to this point took occasion to remark that he for one would not dream of overriding the opinion found by a jury in reference to the credibility or otherwise of witnesses who were examined before them, and as to whose truthfulness or otherwise they, having those witnesses before them, were the best judges.

According to a Calcutta paper, an old Mahommedan, not very decently clad, appeared before Mr. Gordon Leite, the officiating Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, on Tuesday morning, and said that he wanted a summons against the Queen-Empress of the said that he wanted a summons against the Queen-Empress of the country for having refused to give her daughter Beatrice in marriage with him, and the sovereignty of this country, as she had promised to do. He stated further that he had money deposited with her which she now refused to pay. He went to the bank and called for the money, but they refused to pay. This money, he said, he got from the Sultan of Constantinople. His worship asked him where he lived. The applicant said that he lived in Calcutta, where he was born, but he had been to England and lived there for fifteen years, and had spoken to Lord Mayo, then Governor-General. His worship thought that the man was not of sound mind. sound mind.

MADRAS.

During the quarter ending 30th June 601 bullocks were reported to have been killed in the Madras Presidency by tigers and cheetahs. Also 731 cows, 190 calves, 181 buffaloes, 126 sheep, 156 goats, 29 horses and ponies, 25 asses, 31 dogs, and 9 pigs. About half of this destruction occurred in the South Canara district.

Ar a public meeting at Ootacamund, convened by the Collector for the purpose of considering the question of the jubilee at Madras on the 1st January, Sir Harry Prendergast took the chair, and said:—"It would be a labour of love to dilate on the goodness and greatness of the Empress. We admire her for her domestic duties, untiring devotion to duty, and determination to do all that is right." He referred to the growth of England under her reign, and marked the advances of civilisation, and requested the meeting to join heartily in the movement. The Collector, Mr. Burrows, after convening the meeting, thought he had done his duty in his official capacity, and that any further part he took in the proceedings would be in a private capacity. General Faunce moved:—"That the meeting heartily approves the proposal of the Madras General Committee to celebrate the jubilee on the 1st January or any other date fixed by the AT a public meeting at Ootacamund, convened by the Collector jubilee on the 1st January or any other date fixed by the authorities."

BOMBAY.

At a large influential meeting for the Countess of Dufferin's Fund, held at Surat, on the 17th, upwards of Rs. 2,000 was subscribed on the spot.

AT the instance of Colonel Beville, the Bombay Government gave permission for the removal of the body of Lieutenant Daly, who died recently from the effects of an accident at polo, from the temporary grave in which it was placed on Thursday, to the vault in which his mother, Mrs. Daly, was buried in August, 1874. THE Catholics of Goa held a meeting in the city of Nova Goa, and, with the adherence of the whole of the Hindustan Catholics, a resolution was passed protesting against the Padroado Concordat, and praying for a purely Indian hierarchy for the Indies, independent from the foreign clergy, as they possess sufficient funds. for its maintenance and two thonsand priests for less than two million Catholics

At the fancy ball given in honour of their Royal Highnesses— the Duke and Duchess of Connaught at Poona a well-known— member of the Bombay Civil Service is said to have appeared ina most unique garb, one half of his costume being correct evening dress with the words "The good old days" on his back, and the other half clothed in sackcloth with the inscription, which, says the reporter of a Bombay paper, found an echo in every heart, namely, "Victim to exchange! Rupe gone down to one-and-fi pepence."

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

The Indian Daily News, correspondent at Delhi, writing on the 15th inst., says:—"Shimbhoo Nath Khatri, cloth merchant of Nika Katra, one of the Hindu ringleaders, with two others is suspected of the murder of the Mahommedan lad, and was arrested and confined in the Kotwali lock-up yesterday. The wealthy Hindus of the city are trying their utmost to obtain the release of their friend, and are engaging certain barristers to that end but the local authorities now appear to be aware of the brutal action against the Mahommedans, and therefore it is now hoped by the Mahommedans that their aggressors will be punished with out regard to the position of the offenders.

The Lahore paper says "that the Vicercy has purchased one of the pictures which are said to have been rejected by the Committee of the Simla Fine Arts Exhibition—namely, the portrait of himself. His Excellency further expressed his assonishment at the behaviour of the Committee. Doubtless many less fortunate exhibitors would have been glad enough to expel their own pictures and then see them purchased by his Excellency; for we are credibly informed that the Committee had not rejected any work, and the portrait of his Excellency had actually been hange. work, and the portrait of his Excellency had actually been hung. The artist, however, discovering another of her pictures awaiting the decision of the Committee, incontinently removed all of them."

The Indian Daily News has received from the Bahraich District some further intelligence regarding the abduction of a young-Native woman in British territory and her confinement across the Nepalese frontier. The paper mentioned says:—"The latest news is satisfactory insomuch as we are told that the Nepalese Congrupant handed over the earlier civil to the British authorities." Government handed over the captive girl to the British authorities, and she is now at liberty. Further, the Nepalese Subah, or chief official, at Nepalganj, has been removed from his post and another man appointed in his stead. But we have still to hear of the author of the outrage being brought to justice. The sworn affirmation of the girl, Nazir Jan, we are told, clearly accuses a certain named individual, and whatever the accused person's rank or local influence may be, it appears incumbent upon the North-Western Provinces Government to see that the affair is submitted. to the test of a thorough judicial investigation."

CENTRAL INDIA.

BARBARISM IN CENTRAL INDIA.—In the Administration Report of the Central India Agency for 1884-85 there is a remarkable account of the doings of the fakirs who assemble in number at the Sanghast festival at Ujjain in the month of March. The fair was visited by cholera, and though every effort was made to get it under, the conditions were most unfavourable to success, for "the fakirs, who attended in great numbers, were absolutely defiant of all control, and resisted all restriction on their movements. It is but a few years ago that the Durbar troops, with luaded a cannon and muskets, were unable to preserve peace between the rival bands of worshippers seeking to bathe at the propitious moment in the most sacred portions of the stream, and numbers have been killed in these fierce contests. Even to-day the ascetics are very unmanageable, and the State ficials are afraid of them. Oneinstance of this may be recorded as showing the barnarism which instance of this may be recorded as showing the barnarism which, still exists in the country. A band of that loathsome sect known as the Agori Panth came to Ujjain at the beginning of the tair, and demanding some goats from the authorities, were refused. On this they proceeded to the burning ghât, and taking a corpse from the pile, began to devour it. The horrified spectators summoned the police, but these naked fanatics only desisted on being promised the goats which had been before refused them."

Production of Coffee.—A meeting of planters and other gentlemen interested in the production and import of coffee was held at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, on Tuesday (November 9), when a provisional committee was appointed to arrange for the formation of a society with a view to check the adulteration and admixture of coffee by procuring an amendment of the existing law and otherwise. Communications on this subject may be addressed to the Coffee Planters' Committee, Colonial and Indian Exhibition, South Kensington.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

AUSTRALIANA.*

Mr. Henty must be congratula ed upon having written a very nice chatty book narrating his experiences, chiefly in Australia, but also in Europe, when he came over to put the finishing touches to his education. He speaks, too, with some authority, seeing that his grandfather was one of the first settlers in Australia. having emigrated to that country so far back as the year 1829. His father, too, was a prosperous farmer, having amassed no less a fortune than £120,000 by dint of hard work and patient industry. The author himself, also, appears to have done fairly well in the world, for he talks of an income of £6.000 a-year in terms which seem to indicate that he does not deem this by any means an abnormal amount to receive during a year; but, then, he has learned the true secret of success, which is to work hard and husband resources when youth and vigour ae in full swing, and then, when the "sere and yellow leaf" appears, rest, be thankful, and enjoy life.

Judging from the account given in this volume station life in Australia seems both pleasant and profitable; but then it must not be overlooked that it is not everyone who can boast of a father with capital to the tune of six figures at his back; and many a man is ruined by one year's drought, who, had he been a capitalist, might fairly have expected to have a massed large wealth in subsequent more favourable seasons. Gold "prospecting, on the other hand, seems pure gambling, and though Mr. Henty being, as most men at the time were, struck with the mania of becoming suddenly rich, went up country to seek the precious quarz, and made some money, he wisely urges others to refrain, and plod along steadily at legitimate means of enrichment.

The volume abounds with anecdotes and experiences, some none too credible; for instance, it takes a "lot of believing" to picture a tree so thick that three waggons could go abreast in its circumference! Nor did we know, though we do not dispute the on board a ship get sea-sick. Equally we were ignorant that amongst Arabs of the desert the "points way" of introduction is to charge full gallop at the new comer, levelling the gun the while so as to cover the body of the latter. Curious is the account of a whale being harpooned in 1838 and caught in 1880! But if the object of the book be to amuse rather than to enlighten we have no hesitation in awarding Mr. Henty the meed of praise which is due to good fellowship, good cheer, and good

AUSTRALIAN PICTURES.+

The Religious Tract Society assuredly possess the art of selecting writers woo have the happy knack of popularising the various subjects they may chance to be called upon to take in band. Mr. Howard Willoughby is no exception to the rule, and in his "Australian Pictures" he has presented to the public one of the most concise and interesting accounts which it has been our lot to read as to the huge island in Oceana. Enough detail is given to explain, and not to tire; and what the pen fails—and must fail to explain, and not to tire; and what the pon fails—and must fail—to describe, pictures, exquisitely and artistically executed, serve to convey. And what a marvellous tale is this record of English enterprise!—how all the finest traits of the Saxon race stand forth in high relief! What courage, what energy, what zeal, what enthusiasm animated the hearts of the earlier pioneers as they traversed unknown tracks and unexplored regions, bringing civilisation and all its attendant advantages into the fastnesses of Nature, and the hunting grounds of the savege aboriginal. of Nature, and the hunting-grounds of the savage aboriginal! And there is still room for the young aspirant to independence and fortune; there is land enough, and to spare, for all who choose to battle with the wilds of the forests, and the virgin vegetation of a fertile and untouched soil. But the task is laborious; and it needs energy, toil, and endeavour to conquer in a struggle when man has to reclaim the wilds of the j ngle and the wastes of the prairie. The life of a settler is not passed in the lap of indolence; he does not drink the cup of luxury, or quast the waters of ease If this be a man's aim let him read quaif the waters of ease If this be a man's aim let him read Mr. Willoughby's charming work, and sigh over the prizes which will never fall to his lot, and dream of that success which must be deserved to be secured. His only pleasure—and it is great—will be that of a pleasunt hour or two's reading—and for this we are fully prepared to stand spousor—as to men, cities, forests, plains, birds, beasts, and fishes of an island but little less in extent than the whole of Europe.

NECERA: A TALE OF ANCIENT ROME.*

It is refreshing in these days of sensational novels, the scenes of which are drawn from the gay and so ductive surroundings of everyday life, to read a tale founded on the events which hap pened in Imperial Rome, when the hand of time had marked but seven-and-twenty years upon the dial of the Christian era. Not that there is any lack of interest in Mr. Graham's most fascinating story. There is love, but it is the pure, unalloyed, unsophisticated love of a maiden in lowly station and of humble parentage; it is the love of a high-minded werrior true to his profession true. is the love of a high-minded warrior, true to his profession, true to his betrothed; it is the love, too, of a proud Roman lady of high birth and unrivalled beauty, who could undergo danger when Cupid sent forth his shaft and pierced a tender heart and laid low a proud spirit. There is plot, too, enough and to spare, sufficient to attract the most "exigeant" reader of modern fiction sufficient to attract the most "exigent" reader of modern fiction—intrigues, villainy, murder, abduction, rascality in high life, misdeds in the lower ranks; but all are tempered with an atter absence of that semi-veiled impropriety which is the bane of so many a production of modern times. Nor are the characters wanting in artistic charm; they are sketched with a master's hand, and seldom has it been our lot to find an author more familiar with the under-currents of human nature, which make up the sum total of daily life with all its peculiarities, its inconsistencies, its successes, and its failures.

Let us glance at one or two characters. First of all, place aux dames, there is Newra, who is introduced to the reader as a humble potter's daughter, woo ed and won by a Centurion of Cæsar's Pretorian Guard. What a charming character! So guileless, so sweet, so inexpressibly captivating, that when the denoucment comes, and she is portrayed surrounded with all the outward emblems of wealth, honour, and rank, she still yearns for the simple pleasures of childhood, for the happy, albeit humble, scenes of early days, when she served in her father's shop in an obscure village. Then there is a Julius Marsialis, her lover, courageous, honourable, and faithful to his first choice amidst all the seductions, the wiles, the gaieties of the metropolis of the proudest Empire known to ancient fame. And what a magnificent scene when, in the midst of the Great Cæsar's Court he snatches his fiancée from the hands of her abductors, and alone, unaided and undaunted, he defies him whose nod was law, whose very look was dangerous, and whose word was death!

As regards the illustrious Tiberius, the scrupulous, and withal able and powerful ruler of the then civilised world, the reader will find ample to interest and instruct; a rule of espionage, of secret doors and subterranean cavorus, of plots and counterplots, of intrigues and crimes, may—nay, must -inspire disgust, but it can scarcely bootherwise than fascinating. Nor can less than a tribute of admiration be paid to the illustrious Plautia, who, blessed by nature with the most winning form and boundless grace, could spurn the many offers which her heart could not endorse, and throw herself at the feet of a lover she adored, whose presence was to her the very breath of her nostrils, the life-blood of her veins; and if in her conduct there is much from which the reader recoils, an absence of the gentler touches which attract, and a superabundance of the sterner attributes which repel, it cannot be denied that, with all her faults, Plautia was grand and magnificent in every action of her life; her better self was superb.

Other characters in the plot must be dismissed with brevity. The old patrician who passes a life and spends a fortune in endeavouring to find a long-lost grandchild—the last of the race to perpetuate his name and keep alive his memory—is a race to perpetuate his name and keep alive his memory—is a noble and touching character which commands sympathy and ensures admiration—the more so as his virtues are in prominent contrast to the despicable and utterly contemptible vices of his nephew and heir, who played upon the weakness of his uncle in order to minister to his own wants and indulge in his own gratifications. Nor must we omit the lowly bully who served as a tool in the hand of his equally unscrupulous patron, the last-mentioned patrician, and to whose efforts to avenge himself upon him who deserted him, who plunged a dagger in his heart, and poured forth his life's blood like water upon the earth, the denouement of the tale finds its solution. the denouement of the tale finds its solution.

Mr. Graham must be congratulated upon the production of a tale graphic in its inception, accurate in its development, and as interesting as the most melodramatic concoction of modern society which seeks effect at the expense of probability, which shocks as well as pleases, and which leaves a wake of unreality, attractive, perhaps, to the many, but unacceptable to the few.

the ill-fortified and worst-found fortalice of Kahun, was, like so many magnificent deeds of Anglo-Indians, long entombed in the impromising obscurity of official records; and it was reserved for Mr. C. R. Williams to disinter it, and to ensure that the memory of a noble deed shall not perish, for want of a record.

That Kahun, a place lying "on the way from nothing to nowhere," was ever occupied, would have been "one of those things which no fellow can understand," had it not been done by Sir J. Keane, whose proceedings at Ghazni were—well we refrain from criticising.

We prominently noticed Captain Lewis Brown's (unrewarded) merits in remarking on this most interesting narrative when first published (from Brown's own diary) in the Army and Navy Magazine for April and May last; and can only now commend it to the reader as a tale of all but unexampled courage, skill, and endurance in withstanding all but unparalleled difficulties.

THE VICEBOY'S VISIT TO HYDERABAD.—We hear that the Reception Committee has given Messrs. Cursetjee and Co. the contract for the whole of the furnishing of the Viceroy's camp at Roza, and the provision of carriages, &c., for the sum of Rs. 67,000. This seems to us a very large sum. If other expenditures are to be in proportion, the sums already sunctioned for the Viceroy's reception will be insufficient.—Deccan Times.

THE total number of troops despatched from Madras to Burma between the 15th of September and the 4th of October was 37 European officers, 57 Native officers, 1,613 European troops, and 2,580 Native troops. The transports also carried 1,436 public followers, and 119 private followers, besides 1,508 horses and ponies, 309 mules, and 451 bullocks.

SIR EVELYN BARING writes from Cairo to Mr. Malabari:—"I meed hardly tell you how much I sympathise with the courageous efforts you are making to improve the position of the women in India. I earnestly hope that those efforts may eventually be crowned with success. Do not be discouraged at slow progress. You have already done much more than for my own part I should have expected, considering the deep root which the social evil you are attacking has taken in the country."

Mg. Ballard.—A correspondent of the Civil and Military Gazette writing from Palumpore, Kangra, Oct. 19, says:—"On Saturday evening last Mr. Richard Ballard, senr., Manager of the Nassau Tea Company, Limited, was entertained by his brother planters at dinner at the Club on the occasion of his leaving for England. There was a large party, and a most enjoyable evening was spent. The dinner was a great success, and ably presided over by our worthy and popular doctor. Every good wish was expressed for a safe and pleasant voyage to Mr. Ballard, and a happy meeting at home with his family. It is thirty years since Mr. Ballard last visited England; and for twenty-six years he has been a planter in this valley. For many years past he has been manager of the Nassau Tea Company—the largest concern in this valley. Mr. Ballard is very popular with all the planters of this valley, and deservedly so, for he is always ready and willing to give a helping hand to any needing his help, and affords the fullest information on tea, in all its branches, to any desiring it. Last, not least, there is no more hospitable man in this valley; and his splendid factory, with its fine machinery, is open to all, and he never tires of showing one over it and explaining all about it to those interested in tea and its manufacture. No wonder then our dinner on Saturday night at the club should have been such a success."

WE are requested to state that it is not intended that the new Distinguished Service Order should have any retrospective effect beyond the recent military operations for which honours and distinctions have not yet been awarded.

H.H. THE MYNGOON PRINCE, "Eldest Prince of Burma," writes as follows to the Madras Mail from Pondicherry:—"In the recent debate in Parliament on Burma affairs, some of the honourable members inquired 'why the Government of Burma was not made over to a Native prince?' The Secretary of State for India answered that 'Lorl Dufferin proceeded to Mandalay with that view, and although there were seventy or eighty branches of the Royal descendants, yet not one was found fit and capable to govern the country, and hence annexation was declared.' As Burma has now been proclaimed a part of Her Majesty's dominions, and the British Government may govern it itself, or do what it likes with it, I have nothing to grumble about, that, but to bring me under the category of the illegitimate and unfit princes and descendants of whom there are so many, is rather injurious to me, my position, and my cause. I am the eldest, the legitimate, and the rightful prince, which the accompanying book will plainly show and prove, and I have done nothing whatever to give offence to the British Government, except escaping from its captivity, and taking protection under the French Government, which step was taken by me only to secure my personal freedom; and I have frequently, while residing in French territory, corresponded with the British Government, towards whom I have personally cherished only a friendly feeling."

The forging of bank-notes seems almost to have been abandoned throughout India during the year 1885 86. The only circle in which such notes were presented was Calcutta. These consisted of six five-rupee notes, two for ten rupees, and one for fifty rupees. They are all said to have been very clumsy attempts at forgery, the medallions being thick and coarse, and the words in the body of the notes very rough. The paper of one of the two ten-rupee notes was better than usual, and bore an imitation of the water-mark "Government of India."

FROM a notification in the Central Provinces Gazette it appears that work is about to be recommenced on the Nagpur-Bengal Railway. THE NIZAM'S STATE RAILWAY.—We understand that Mr. W. C. Furnival, the Agent and Chief Engineer of his Highness the Nizam's Guaranteed State Railways Company, Limited, is expected to arrive at Secunderabad about the first week in November. He is coming vested with full power and Instructions as to the further extension of the line to Chanda, &c., and also the working of the Singarenni coal fields. We also hear that two thoroughly experienced engineers will probably accompany him to supplement the present staff in connection with the coal fields and also the proposed construction to Chanda.—Deccan Times.

The rules will come into force on the 1st proximo.

THE AFRICAN STEAMSHIP COMPANY.—A petition has been presented to the Queen in Council, praying for the grant of a supplemental charter to the African Steamship Company, and has been referred to the Lords of the Council, by whom it will be taken into consideration on December 15th.

The Press Commissioner announces the important fact that the export of dates from Bagdad has been temporarily interdicted, but that the ox port from Bussorah remains as before. Verily, as Ali Baba said, the P. C. is like the Cheshire cat—there is nothing left of him but the grin. On the mere nomination of the Finance Committee it might have been expected that the Commissioner would have committed official suicide, burdened with the thought of his useless and unhappy career.

According to a Constantinople paper the Turkish Government estimates the number of pilgrims who have this year visited the holy places of Islam at 250,000. It is not stated whether this is much above or below the usual figure, but whatever it represents we may reasonably presume that India supplies a-half of the total. It must be borne in mind that the pilgrims making the Haj from this country are furnished not only from our own 40,000,000 Indian Muhammadans, but also from the Moslem populations of Central Asia, who find the route by sea from Bombay the quickest and easiest way of reaching Arabia. With the possibility of attracting so large a clientele, Messrs. Thomas Cook and Sons should make a good profit out of the carriage of pilgrims from India to Jeddah.

The Indian Engineer has passed under new editorial management. Up to the present the paper has been conducted with conspicuous success by Mr. P. Doyle, a well known writer on engineering and kindred subjects. Under Mr. Doyle's editorship, the journal at once became the recognised organ of the engineering classes in India, who will no doubt regret to hear that his connection with it has now ceased. It will be difficult to find a successor who will bring the same experience and practical knowledge to bear upon the management of the paper that Mr. Doyle did.

OPIUM AND SILVER.

At the opening meeting of the present session of the Institute of Bankers, held at the London Institute on Wednesday last, the President, Mr. J. H. Tritton, offcred a curious suggestion with regard to a possible method of increasing the absorption of silver in the East. He is reported to have said:—

The Indian Government has, within its own power, an opportunity afforded, by the very low price of silver, of largely influencing the flow of silver into its natural channels, from which their own deliberate policy has diverted it for years past. This is not the occasion to enter upon the controversy as to the rights and wrongs of China in the matter of the opium trade. We may each hold our own opinion theron; but one part of the Chinese complaint against us, quite apart from sentiment, is undubitably true, that the import of Indian opium seriously affects their power either to retain or increase their stock of silver. China wishes to be paid for her large export of tea to this country more largely in silver; but she is practically paid for the whole of it in opium, the export of the one and the import of the other being, in roung figures, not far from an average of £8,000,000 per annum. Suppose—it may appear a wild supposition—a total failure of the opium crop; or—still wilder dream—a deliberate giving up, on full consideration of the case, of the one great Government monopoly of to-day. The tea we drink must be paid for, but silver would be the medium, and the Indian Government would recoup in the rehabilitation of the exchange value of the rupee, caused by so great and urgent a demand for it, a great part of their loss of revenue from their opium.

Mr. Tritton very properly declines to discuss the sentimental side of the opium question, but the agitators against the drug and the supposed fostering of its evil influence by the Government of India will gladly seize the opportunity of adding what they will take to be a sound financial argument against the cultivation and exportation to China of "the accursed thing." Our thoughtful contemporary, the Statist, takes up Mr. Tritton's parable, and shows that there is "nothing in it;" but the anti-opium people are not likely to be convinced by arguments which tell against themselves. But the arguments of the Statist are sound and sensible, nevertheless. Our contemporary points out the facts that representatives such as Mr. Tritton hints at from the Chinese authorities are entitled to little or no weight, for the Government of China very inadequately represents the wants or opinions of the people. "The officials are corrupt even beyond that degree of corruption which among Eastern nations is inseparable from the possession of the power of office. When the import of opium was illegal, it was imported none the less. None the less was a duty paid upon it, although it was not officially imposed. The duty that now goes openly into the coffers of the Government formerly went secretly into the pockets of the Mandarins, and of every official whose connivance it was necessary to secure. It was the illicit character of the trade that alone caused any drain of bullion such as was complained of." In those days the opium imported had to be paid for in good sycee silver, neither bills nor drafts being accepted; but, as our contemporary points out there is no reason under present circumstances to suppose there is any extensive drain of bullion. "Whither would it go?" the writer asks, "except to India; and, gold and silver together, India receives but little more than two millions sterling from China."

The other suggestion that if opium ceased to be imported silver to an equal extent would flow in, is also sensibly combated. Everybody who has had any experience of the two countries, and has made even a superficial study of the opium question in its practical and not in its sentimental bearings, knows that if the Government of India forbid the cultivation of the drug to-morrow it would nevertheless be smuggled into China, and an extraordinary impetus would be given (with the connivance of the Chinese officials) to the making of opium in China itself. But accepting for argument sake that we are mistaken in this view, and that it would be possible to educate the Chinese to diminish their opium importation from India, the Statist sensibly asks why should it be supposed that they would augment their import of silver instead of taking increased quantities of cotton or woollen manufactures, or of any of the other metals imported by them at present? So far as the knowledge of foreigners. regarding the habits of the Chinese of the interior extends, there is no reason to think that they have any need of silver as currency, and it is known that they do not use silver to any extent for ornaments. For banking purposes they are quite satisfied with a paper cur-That a Chinese banker would think it necessary to hold silver as a reserve against his note issue, would be, as our contemporary says, a superfluous concession on his part to Western ideas. And to exemplify this there is on record the fact that upon the occasion of a run on some bankers at Foo-Choo, when the mob became too clamorous in their demands for payment, the soldiery were called in and the matter settled by beheading in the street. some of the largest and most clamorous of the noteholders.

Mr. Tritton has certainly furnished the anti-opium agitators with another argument, but, as our able contemporary shows, a weak and fallacious one. The cessation of the opium exportation from India is not yet the solution of the Silver difficulty.

THE Indians, who were employed under the direction of Dr. Tyler, C.I.E., at the Indo-Colonial Exhibition at South Kensington, returned to Bombay by the mail on Monday. One of their number, a copperamith from Delhi, died on the voyage.

THE Madras Government has recommended to the Secretary of State and the Government of India that a special court should be formed for the trial of Mr. Crole in connection with the recent events which have formed the subject of the so-called Madras scandals. The matter is under consideration by the Government of India, which there is reason to believe is strongly opposed to the view of the subject taken by the Madras Government.

OBITUARY.

THE LATE GENERAL BOILEAU.

"Anglo-Indian" writes:—" Will you permit me to place on record in your columns some estimate of the character and career of the late General Boileau, who died at 31, Ladbrokesquare, W, on the 7th inst. There are few survivors of his contemporaries at Addiscombe, in 1820, among whom were the brothers Sir Henry and Sir George Lawrence, and many other men who have made great names in Indian history; but even at this distance of time two of his fellow-cadets, also brothers, Sir this distance of time two of his fellow-cadets, also brothers, Sir Frederick Abbott and General James Abbott, C.B. ("Khiva Abbott"), will recall to memory the marvellous boy of fifteen, who, by his ready answers before the Court of Directors, astonished that august body and delighted the professors, who reported him as the most promising cadet of his year. Owing, however, to his Indian career neing chiefly passed in the Civil department, he never achieved the reputation or reaped the honours gained by far inferior men, with better opportunities of earning military distinction. But his labours in the construction of churches and public works of every description at gaols, barracks, bridges, and public works of every description, at a time when there existed no vast and expensive Public Works Department, and when India was almost a virgin-field for the exercise of engineering talent, were well known and appreciated by his contemporaries and successive Governor - Generals. Notably, Lords Hardinge and Dalhousie entertained the highest Notably, Lords Hardinge and Dalhousie entertained the highest opinion of the acquirements and services of the late General Boileau. Whenever a commission was appointed of more than ordinary importance the young Engineer officer was the working member, and drew up the report and made the plans. His reports on Mooltan and the fortification of Ferozepore, then a frontier post (the late General the Hon. T. Ashburnham and Sir George Brooke being his coadjutors), are cases in point; while he inaugurated the system of magnetic observatories in India, anticipated and corresponded with Sir Joshua Jebb in his prison reforms, drew up the regulations for the Indian Public Works Department, and was the author of a book of "Logarithms," which is of world-wide celebrity and utility. For many of these works others reaped the kudos; and when he retired into private life, after thirty-six years' of arduous and unsparing labours, he received no honorary acknowledgment for his services. This, however, was not for what he worked; and he always said that the hearty and unstinted approbation of the Governor-Generals under whom he served, and to whom he sometimes reported direct when employed on special missions of great importance, was ample reward for a public servant. But there is another, and certainly not less important, phase of the character and career of General Boileau. In India he was prominent in all good works of charity and religion. Whether conducting Sunday services (the late Bishop Wilson, of Calcutta, playfully called him his chaplain), or working with his wonted ardour for the Church missionary and other religious societies, or whether as the coadjutor of his friend, Sir Henry Lawrence, in the institution of the famous asylum for fatherless children named after him, he gave freely not only of his means, but of his valuable time and the unsurpassed administrative and organising talent of which he was possessed. On his return to England in of which he was possessed. On his return to England in 1857, a few months before the outbreak of the Mutiny, General Boileau threw himself with characteristic zeal into the philanthropic work so congenial to his nature. We will merely refer to his active connection with the Naval and Military Bible Society, and Deaf and Dumb Asylum; but his work as chairman of the Soldiers' Daughters' Home for over twenty-three years, and in a similar capacity of the Royal School for Officers' Daughters for eight years, deserves special mention. His colleagues of both institutions will bear me out when I record how their late beloved chairman devoted his talents and time without stint to these noble charities, converting a room in his house into an office, these noble charitics, converting a room in his house into an office, where he was employed from early morning till late at night. He gloried in his labours, and revelled in statistics, and reports, and plans, and tabular statements, and anything which gave trouble, provided only the welfare of the institutions, so dear to his heart and never absent from his thoughts, was furthered. His disinterestedness, warmth of heart, simplicity of character, capiclists and unoffected and a superscent him botto of friends. His disinterestedness, warmth of heart, simplicity of character, geniality, and unaffected goodness procured him hosts of friends, and to this day, thirty years after quitting India, his name is proverbial in that country as the possessor of these high qualities of the head and heart, while all his numerous friends in this country will long hold him in affectionate remembrance. That I am not employing the language of undue eulogy, a host of witnesses in England and India will bear willing testimony. On the initiation of the Volunteer movement in 1861 he joined the Victoria Rifles, and though he was offered the command of the regiment Rifles, and though he was offered the command of the regiment by the late Duke of Wellington, for the sake of example, preferred to serve in the ranks; and Private Major-General Boileau carried a musket at the early annual reviews at Brighton, and competed successfully for the Corps' shooting prizes with his comrades, among whom his popularity was great. His versatility and the extent of his information were remarkable. The Royal Society elected him a Fellow while in India nearly fifty years ago, as an acknowledgment of his services to science, and he served on the Council of that body. As chairman for many years of the Special Purposes Committee of the Kensington Vestry he ren-dered conspicuous services to his fellow-citizens, and endeared himself to the vestrymen, who subscribed for a marble bust of their their colleague, which now adorns the Council Chamber of the Town Hall, an edifice constructed under his superintendence. In short, General Boileau was equally eminent as an engineer, scientist, man of business, and philanthropist. So much of him in his public capacity. Of the love to his family and friends we have no need to speak. In conclusion, it is with sadness I have to record that his last years were darkened by the thought that he, who had devoted a lifetime to the service of the orphan, would be a search provision for his a country provision for his accountry provision for his provision his provision for his provision his provision his pr leave but a scanty provision for his two unmarried daughters, owing to losses in the Agra Bank and elsewhere. I have reason to believe that a fund for these ladies has been started, under the presidency of his life-long friend, Field-Marshal Lord Napier of Magdala; and another brother-officer of the Engineers, Major-General P. Ravenhill, C.B., of 50, Holland-road, W., will, I am sure he happy to receive and acknowledge contributions. sure, be happy to receive and acknowledge contributions.

THE TRANS-FRONTIER TRADE OF INDIA.

The following is the official account of the trans-frontier trade of India for the year 1885-6. The trans-frontier trade is, in other words, that with the neighbouring countries to India:—

The imports from foreign territory last year were valued at 519,34 lakhs, this total being less than that of 1884-5 by 32,12 lakhs, or nearly 6 per cent. The exports were valued at 721,01 lakhs, a sum larger than the value of 1884-5 by 108,78 lakhs, or close on 18 per cent. The whole trade, imports and exports, amounted to 1,240,35 lakhs, which sum exceeded the trade value of 1884-5 by 76,66 lakhs, or a little over 6 per cent. This increase was due entirely to exports across the frontier over the Scinde-Pishin Railway of railway material for the construction of that line. These exports give an increase in the year of 102,37 lakhs, so that if they are left out of the account, as they may be so far as a record of actual trade is concerned, the results of the year are a good deal worse than those of 1884-5. There was a large diminution, as might have been expected, in the trade with Upper Burma and the Karen country, and the trade with Cashmere also declined materially.

Khelat.—In imports a small increase arising out of a larger import of raw wool. In exports a considerable decrease of trade in manufactured cottons.

Cabul.—A decline in imports, the larger articles of trade with India, horses, madder, and fruits and nuts all giving smaller returns. There was some little improvement in raw silk, though the imports still continue on a much smaller scale than formerly, and in assafcetida, charas, and ghee. The whole value of the imports was less than 23 lakhs, the total having declined by about a lakh in each of the last two years. The export trade has increased from 46,91 lakhs to 53,67 lakhs, the trade of 1883—4 being 52,11 lakhs, a small increase in the three years following on a larger trade in Indian cottons. We find also a larger trade in wheat, leather, salt, with a decline in indigo and sugar.

Cashmere.—Imports fell from 53,05 lakhs to 49,06 lakhs, the decrease being the result of the depression in the shawl trade, which fell in value by nearly 7 lakhs. There was also some restriction in the timber trade, raw silk, fruits, dyeing materials, and charas. Woollen goods (not shawls) increased considerably, and it may be inferred that as the weaving of shawls declines the manufacture of other fabrics takes its place to some extent. Ghee, hides, and drugs also give larger returns. Exports have fallen off, though not much. The piece-goods trade does not seem to increase and was smaller than in the preceding year, as was the trade in motals. The exports of sugar and salt were larger.

Tibet.—The value of the import trade did not reach 7 lakhs Borax, the most important of the imports, can hardly be profitably brought across the Himalayas for export to Europe now that Tuscany and California supply unlimited quantities at very cheap rates, and the use of Tibetan borax will probably in a short time be entirely limited to India, so that the trade can hardly be expected to rise much higher than the present level. The import of salt was a little smaller than in the preceding year; it is now able to compete with Indian salt only in the inner ranges of the Himalayas. The imports of wool have also slightly fallen of in quantity. The exports also have fallen off, the total value of last year being less than 23 lakhs. The bulk of this trade is grain of sorts, mainly rice and wheat.

Nepaul.—Imports increased from 138,71 lak hs to 153,62 lakhs A large proportion of the trade consists of rice, which was imported last year to the value of over 50 lakhs. Wheat and other grains represented about 10 lakhs more. Oilseeds are also an important item; these stand for about 18 lakhs last year. Next to the grain trade, that in timber is the most important, however; the value of this was 30.3 lakhs, a smaller sum than in the preceding year. Ghee is imported in fairly large quantity, with opium, hides, saltpetre, drugs, and spices, and there is a fairly large cattle trade. Exports have fallen from 98,14 lakhs to 85,55 lakhs this year. Close on 40 lakhs out of this total are the value of cotton twist and piece goods exported. There was a slight decline in this trade last year, as there was in the trade in brass, copper and iron. Spices, sugar, tobacco, and fruits also give smaller returns, but these things are not of any real importance. The trade in woollen goods improved.

Upper Burma.—The record of this trade will not appear in the Upper Burma.—The record of this trade will not appear in the returns after the present year, the country having become British territory. China will be substituted for it, the registering posts being transferred to Bhamo. The trade of last year was materially reduced in consequence of the military operations and the employment of the steamers of the Irrawaddy Flotilla, which convey practically the whole trade, on the transport of troops and munitions of war. It seems unnecessary, under the altered political condition of this country, to give space to an examination of the details of trade with it.

Karennee.—The import trade is really limited to teak, in which there was a material decline last year. The export trade is very small and hardly existed last year. From Zimmé there was a larger import of teak.

small and hardly existed last year. From 21mme there was a larger import of teak.

Scinde-Pishin Railway.—Value of imports 1883-4, 20,16 lakhs; 1884-5, 17,23 lakhs; 1885-6, 20,18 lakhs. The principal importation was raw wool, 40,141 cwt. having been imported, value 5,46 lakhs. Fruits and nuts, value 3,40 lakhs, grain and pulse over 2 lakhs, railway material, about 2 lakhs, madder 1,10 lakhs. The railway does not carry much trade inwards as yet; but it may show good results after its completion to Quetta. The exports look large, but if from the 316,43 lakhs of last year are deducted railway material to the value of 172,15 lakhs, the balance of 144,28 lakhs is not very considerable, and a very large proportion of this value arises out of the needs of the British garrison and camp followers located in those parts. The trade, however, putting railway material aside altogether, has more than doubled between 1883-4 and 1885-6. Cotton piece goods (37,7 lakhs), woollen goods (5 lakhs), timber (4,83 lakhs), coal (2,7 lakhs), fruits and vegetables (6 lakhs), grain and pulse (about 20 lakhs), liquors (8 lakhs), metal ware (5 lakhs), ghee and provisions (4½ lakhs), and sugar (5 lakhs) make the bulk of the trade.

SIR RICHARD BURTON.

The many friends of Sir Richard Burton are endeavouring to obtain for him permission to retire from the Consular Service with his pension a few years before the usual time, and considering the services rendered by the veteran explorer to his country and to the world at large, and the ludicrous inadequacy of the rewards meted out to him, there is nothing very extravagant in such a request. How great his claims to generous treatment really are is a matter of which most people are probably but ill-informed. Thus within the last few weeks It has been stated in a score of newspapers that Captain Burton was "the author of the system of bayonet exercise in use in the British Army." Quite true. But how is it that no one has added the trifling fact that Captain Burton's reward for that work was a severe official "wigging," and—when the necessity for a system of bayonet exercise could no longer be concealed—permission to draw upon the Treasury for the munificent sum of One Shilling.

In 1861 again, Captain Burton was treated with egregious injustice. He had dared to hint in the days of John Company that the Court of Directors had been guilty of neglect of duties, and the truth of his view was proved by the fact that, had his counsel been followed, the massacre of Christians at Jeddah in 1851 would never have occurred. This was quite enough. He had been in the right, and his official superiors in the wrong. A black mark was, therefore, put against his name; and when the Indian army passed, three years afterwards, from the Company to the Crown the grudge was paid off. He being then on half-pay, had been appointed by Lord Russell Consul at Fernando Po. There are scores of instances of officers being allowed to take civil appointments whilst still upon the cadre of the Staff Corps in India. But the opportunity was too tempting. Burton had offended the "bigwigs," and without the chance of appeal his nineteen years of service were wiped out, and he was left without pay or pension. Even the Whigs of a quarter of a century ago recognised the injustice with which he had been treated, and so, after his famous expedition to Dahomey, he was appointed Consul at Damascus. There, unfortunately, he was found to be in the way. He would not sit by and watch the massacres of the Christian population, and so, at the request of Rashid Pasha, was removed by Lord Granville, who, as Lady Burton says, with some bitterness, "is always complaisant and polite to foreigners." A few months later Lord Granville found out his mistake, and made such reparation as he could by appointing Captain Burton Consul at Trieste, where he has since remained in the enjoyment of the colossal income of £600 a year—less official outgoings.

It is surely not too much to ask that a man who has been thus treated—who has served his country for forty-four years, and always under the most arduous conditions—should be allowed to pass the evening of his days in retirement in the enjoyment of the very modest pittance to which his later official services entitle him. He has sown, and others have reaped; and there can surely be no impropriety in allowing the very small boon which his friends ask for him. If he had associated himself with the South Kensington ring in 1851 he would have received his knighthood a dozen years ago, and there would have been no necessity for his friends to be troubling themselves now about his pension.—Court and Society Review.

PRESENTATION AT THE INDIA OFFICE.—On Wednes lay last the messengers of this office presented one of their number, Mr. John Allen, with a very handsome marble timepiece as a souvenir of their esteem on his retirement after thirty-eight years of public service. Mr. Harvey, who made the presentation, remarked that these acknowledgments of worthy colleagues and valued friends did not occur too often, and trusted that the recipient (whom they would all regret to sever acquaintance with) might be spared to enjoy many years of happiness and contentment; accompanying this simple gift would be the hearty good wishes of all who had the pleasure of knowing him, that prosperity might attend him through what might be aptly termed the autumn and winter of his life. Mr. John Allen, in reply, thanked them for their very handsome present, but more especially for the kind words of sympathy which had accompanied the gift, and should always look back with gratifying pleasure to the fact that he had made so many friends. Subsequently a friend presented him with a handsome cruet stand, and after giving a hearty cheer to their old favourite, the meeting closed.

The announcement that the Messageries Maritimes were negotiating for the permission of the French Government to run a new line of steamers from Aden to Kurrachee, thus bringing Sind into nearer communication with Europe than any other part of India was premature. At any rate, the agents of the Messageries Maritimes in India can give no information as to the completion of any arrangement of the kind. Moreover, the necessary consent could only be obtained from the French Government after discussion in the French Chambers.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

A PETITION was recently forwarded to Government, through the officer commanding the Malabar Volunteer Rifles, by the White Jews of Cochin, praying that they might be permitted to join the Volunteer Corps, to which the Local Government replied that it accepted their services as such, but under conditions laid down in Proceedings of Government No. 4856, of 2nd August, 1880.

The Commander-in-Chief received news of General Macpherson's death on the morning of the 20th at Palampur. He immediately arranged to make a double march into Dharmsals, where he arrived at midday on the 21st. On arrival his Excellency announced that his tour to Dalhousie would not be proceeded with, and arrangements were made for his party to leave forthwith for Umballa.

THE Bombay Army Headquarters were established at Mahableshwar on the 18th instant.

It is officially notified that Sergeant A. E. Oppenheim, Adjutant-General's Department, is the winner of the prize for the best essay on "Practical Suggestions for Reducing the Number of Native Followers attached to British Troops in Peace and War." Havildar Gopalnac Krishnac, 19th Bombay Infantry, is the winner of the prize for the best essay on the "Advisability of Indroducing a System of Messing in the Bombay Native Almy, amongst the different castes, so as to reduce the weight and number of cooking utensils to be carried on service."

The rewards or moonshee allowance now given to officers and soldiers of the British army on passing an examination by the Lower Standard or Higher Standard tests in Hindustani will from the 1st of April, 1887, be superseded by the following scale of rewards:—Lower Standard, Rs. 100; Higher Standard, Rs. 260; Higher Standard, if passed on first examination, Rs. 360. For soldiers, instead of getting Rs. 90 for the Lower Standard and Rs. 90 for the Higher Standard, they will receive Rs. 50 and Rs. 130 respectively. Although there is no reduction in the aggregate amounts to be passed for the Higher Standard examination the change will operate greatly in favour of the Government, as a large percentage of students do not go up for the Higher Standard.

THE Government of India have sanctioned the grant of an outfit allowance, as granted to the escort of the Afghan Boundary Commission, to the Native ranks of the escort of the Gilgrit Mission, now returning to India, as specified below:—Sepoy, R. 24; sowar, Rs. 36. Non-commissioned officers: cavalry, Rs. 75, infantry, Rs. 50.

IMPORTANT changes affecting the welfare of Royal Engineer soldiers in India have been effected through the instrumentality of a special committee presided over by Colonel R. Blood, Royal Engineers, Commandant of the Bengal Sappers and Miners.

A DHARAMSALA correspondent telegraphs on the 23rd inst.:

The Commander in Chief inspected the 1st Battalion 12th Goorkhas yesterday morning. After the parade he professed himself much pleased with the appearance of the regiment. A large number of recruits also paraded—an excellent class of men, although rather young. In the afternoon he inspected the 2nd Battalion, and made some most complimentary remarks to the officers, both British and Native, concerning the high state of efficiency already attained by their corps. The greatest credit is due to Major Rogers for the rapidity with which he has wheeled his newly-caught recruits into line. A very few months should see the battalion quite fit to take the field. Sir Frederick Roberts and party left Dharamsala at five o'clock this morning, and march via Kotleh and Nurpore to Pathankote, whence they proceed by rail direct to Umballa. Nothing further is at present known regarding the Chief's movements, but it is believed that he will halt for several days at Umballa.

JEMADAR RAMANDHAR AWASTHI, of the 11th Bengal Infantry, has been admitted to the third class of the order of merit, for conspicuous gallantry in having near Kaundong, Burma, with a party of twenty sepoys only, successfully resisted for twenty-four hours, until relieved, the attack of a very superior force of the enemy.

It is reported that General Dillon, commanding the Oudh Division, will go on furlough to Europe in April next, and at the expiration of his leave will probably retire from the service.

A WARRANT officer who has been dismissed the service or reduced to a lower grade by sentence of a court-martial, will receive his pay or the pay of his former grade, as the case may be, up to the date on which the decision to that effect is communicated to him, and he is released from custody.

MAJOR FLETCHER, R.A., Assistant Inspector General of Ordnance and Magazines, Poona has, been appointed Superinintendent of the Gun Carriage Factory, Madras, in succession to Colonel McLeod, appointed Inspector-General, Madras.

THE appointment of interpreter in British regiments is abolished with effect from the 1st of April, 1887. The temporary appointment of an interpreter on the present allowances will be allowed to a regiment or battalion during the first year of its service in India, an officer from another regiment or battalion being appointed in the event of their being no qualified officer in the newly-arrived corps.

The annual half mounting allowance will not be given to native soldiers of less than eighteen months' service, but on completion of that period a proportionate allowance at annas eight per mensem, for each month's service, will be admitted in arrears on the 1st of January following, in addition to the annual allowance on that date. The calculation will be by calendar months only, fifteen days and over being taken as one month, and less than fifteen days omitted. This order will have effect as regards soldiers who complete eighteen months' service after the 1st Jan., 1877. 1877.

THE Director-General of Ordnance in India will leave Simla on the 30th inst. for his autumn tour of inspection, proceeding first to Beluchistan. He is due at Quetta on the 4th November, at which important post the Ordnance Depôt will have to be enlarged into a really efficient Arsenal in the Fort round the Miri. On the 12th November he will reach Kurrachee, where the Arsenal has been lately walled in and much improved, and where defence works are being carried on at Manors. Maj. Gen. Lowis will embarked at Kurrachee on the 18th for Aden, where he will will embarked at Kurrachee on the 18th for Aden, where he will carrive on the 25th. At Aden he will inspect the Arsenal, which helped to supply the munitions of war for the late operations in Egypt, and has charge of the stores for the Royal Navy. Leaving Aden by mail steamer, he will reach Bombay on the 7th December. At Bombay he will visit the Arsenal and Gun Carriage Factory (at Colaba), and also the outlying magazines and the defences of the fort. He then stays a week at Poona, till the 20th December, to inspect the Ordnance Depôt there, and the Powder and Amunition Factories at Kirkee, finally reaching Calcutta on the 23rd December. Calcutta on the 23rd December.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE RECENT POLO TOURNAMENT .- Serious accidents and even death seem now to be common attendants of the game of polo. That valuable lives should be lost is not only a matter of regret, That valuable lives should be lost is not only a matter of regret, but should be made a subject for public discussion. It is now important to consider whether the game is worthy of further encouragement. Taking into consideration the risks involved, we think the advocates of the game have not got a very strong case to put before the public. All athletic sports are for strengthening the human frame, not for shortening the tenure of -Bombay Samuchar.

NATIVE MEMBERS FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION .- The constitution of the Commission is the most important question in the whole affair. The independent Native element in the consti-tution is very small. India will be represented by only four members in a committee of fourteen. It is therefore necessary that the Native members should be independent men throughly conversant with the rules of Government service and with the powers versant with the rules of Government service and with the powers of the Natives. It would be difficult to suggest better names than those of Messrs. Dadabhoy, Nowrojee, Telang, Ranade, and Mehta. All these are very busy men, but the services of Mr. Ranade are indispensable. It is our opinion that he should be taken on the Commission even if he has to give up his work in the Finance Committee. Another name which has been suggested, and which deserves mention, is that of Mr. Jehangiershaw Kohiyar, an assistant secretary to Government. Mr. Kohiyar having risen to the high post, which he now enjoys by his own industry and worth, would be a fit member in an inquiry where the question of employing Natives in high posts is to be discussed. the question of employing Natives in high posts is to be discussed.

Indian Council Remittances.—Tenders were invited last week at the Bank of England for Council drafts on India to the amount of 2,000,000 rupees, when the whole amount was allotted, 1,496,000 rupees being on Calcutta, 489,000 rupees on Bombay, and 15,000 rupees on Madras. Tenders at 1s. 5 13-16d. will receive about 48 per cent. of the amount applied for above in full. A special sale of bills for 20,000 rupees afterwards took place at 1s. 5\frac{7}{3}d. per rupee, half being on Bombay, and half on Madras. The amount to be offered on Wcdnesday next has been fixed at 2,000,000 rupees. Telegraphic transfers to the amount of 1,750,000 rupees were also allotted, 1,250,000 rupees being on Calcutta, and 500,000 rupees on Bombay, tenders at 1s. 5\frac{7}{3}d. per rupee receiving about 50 per cent. of the amount applied for, above in full. From April 1 to November 9 the total realised by the sale of bills and telegraphic transfers was £5,431,242.

Silver.—The arrivals of silver from abroad have been small,

SILVER.—The arrivals of silver from abroad have been small, and the Indian Banks have been forced to bid high for Government drafts in the absence of specie shipments. Rupee Paper, for instance, which closed at 74%, has risen less than 9% per cent. since the beginning of August, whereas the advance in sailver has been ever 11 per cent. Four-and-a-half per cent. Rupee Paper has lately been in demand for remittance purposes, with the result that an advance in the London quotation has been accompanied by a fall in India—viz., from Rs. 1023 to Rs.102, owing to the larger supply of paper there.

There is also an Account of Anglo-Indian Periodical Literature, and a brief Sketch of Sporting Literature in India, in which many well-known and distinguished Anglo Indians are mentioned.

Anglo Indians are mentioned.

The object of the above work (originally published in 1875) is to give, in a convenient form, sketches of some of the distinguished men who have materially assisted in building up the fabric of our great Indian Empire. The London Press bestowed a considerable amount of praise on the former little volume, the Standard remarking that it should have been twice the size; while the Friend of India said that "every Anglo-Indian should read" what a London journal styled "a deeply interesting volume."

LIFE OF

SIR HENRY RAEBURN, R.A.

With Portraits and Appendix by his Great-Grands

WILLIAM RAEBURN ANDREW.

Even to look and handle this volume is an enjoyment—nor is the fair ext and promise believed by its contents. This brief memoir of the most eminent Scottish portrait painter is agreeably and profitable reading.—Whitehall Review.

Whitehall Review.
This book is the first separate "Life of Raeburn," and besides being a good sketch of his career as far as it goes, cont-ins a list of his works exhibited in Edinburgh in 1876.—Contemporary Review.
Mr. Andrew writos about "the Reynolds of the North" with all that zealous warmth of appreciation which is due from a Scotchman to a Scotchman, a warmth which grows still more fervid when its object is an ancestor.
—Athensum.

Mr. Andrew does justice to the manliness and amiability of Rasburn's character, and gives us some delightful glimpses of his intercourse with many of the great Scotsmen of his time.—Scotsmen.

H. G. KEENE,

Author of "Pecpul Leaves," "Under the Rose," &c.

"Mr. Keene has not, we believe, a great reputation in England as yet, but in India he seems to be well known."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Mr. Kene's is no untried hand. Well known as a poet in North-Western India, in this volume there is nothing to gainsay his right to the name. . . Often sweet and graceful always vigorous and thoughtful, his verses possess the true lyric swing."—Queen.

"He has a gift of sweet and pathetic expression which endows his lyrical efforts with a charm and freshness quite their own."—Home News.

"We think Mr. Keene is at his best when original; and prefer the latter half of the book to the translations with which the first part is filled."—Oxford TATLER.

"It is impossible to avoid being struck, not only with their beauty and tenderness, but with the fact that they are almost throughout in a minor key. . . . Very sweet, very beautiful, but very sad."—ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

"To our mind Mr. Keene's original verses are more likely to bring him fame and give his readers pleasure. There is always point and interest in them, even in the shortest."-- LITERARY WORLD.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again schieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

. . . . The best service which I over rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23,

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

.... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public sprinted promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE. ESTABLISHED 1833.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

'The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette' has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on apecially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A sories of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette' freely opens its corre-pondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette "circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is sumplied direct to the Army and Marino bureaux of the Frensh, Russien, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout india on the leading topics of the day. The Yoice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and consorvative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constituional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-roomes, Liburiers, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 5th November; from Allahabad and Madras to the 3rd November; and from Calcutta to the 2nd November

THE VICEROY is expected to reach Calcutta, on his return from his tour, by the I.G.S. Clive on the 13th December.

LORD CLANDEBOYE, the eldest son of the Viceroy, who has been suffering from an attack of typhoid fever at Lucknow, is improving in health.

SIR WEST RIDGEWAY and the other members of the Afghan Boundary Commission, together with the escort, arrived safely at Peshawur on the 2nd inst.

News has been received from Cabul that a portion of the great Ghilzai tribe has risen against the Ameer. The rising seems limited at present to the country round Ghuzni, where one of the Ameer's regiments escorting treasure has recently been attacked and dispersed by the tribesmen.

Sanction has been received in India by telegram from the Secretary of State for the completion of the Burma railway—an extension of about 220 miles from Tounghoo to Mandalay. The commencement of operations on the spot was ordered immediately.

THE extension of the Nizam's State Railway into British territory is to be proceeded with as rapidly as possible.

THE Gurgaon District Board have offered to place at the disposal of the Punjab University the necessary funds for the creation of some college scholarships or exhibitions to be granted to students educated in that district, who belong to good but impoverished families.

THE Madras Government has received a telegram from the Government of India directing that the Gunpowder Factory is to be closed immediately.

ORDERS have been issued for the curtailing by thirty per cent. of the allowance drawn by Government employes during their stay at Ootacamund, and instructions as to the strength of the establishment to be taken up in the various Secretariats and the length of their stay at the hills is expected shortly.

THE Financial Committee are required to have their report in readiness by, if possible, the 20th of December next, in order that such of its recommendation as may be found acceptable by Government may be embodied in the Budget of March following.

It is probable that the Queen's Jubilee will be celebrated in Calcutta this cold season. It is thought best to select the same date as Madras if there is to be any celebration at all.

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF has taken his passage to Port Said by the mail of the 10th December. The Hon. E. Forster Webster proceeds to Marseilles by the same steamer

It is proposed that the Agricultural Department of Bengal should be abolished. The local Government, however, is understood to be opposed to the step. The matter is now under consideration.

LIEUT.-COLONEL FILGATE, R.E., is looked on as a very probable successor to Colonel Trevor, C.B., when that officer retires from the important post of Secretary to Government in the Public Works Department in the spring.

MAJOR FIREBRACE, R.E., Deputy Director-General of State Railways, comes to Bombay immediately as Consulting Engineer for Railways and Joint Secretary, insuccession to General Hancock, R.E.

Ir is understood that Colonel Hunt, C.B., Commissary-General, is likely to bring his long career in the Commissariat Department to a close before long, by retirement.

As the Turkish regulations, proposed in 1884, regarding the passports of pilgrims for the Hedjaz, have not yet received the sanction of Her Majesty's Government, the Government of Bombay have been instructed to inform the Protector of pilgrims that it is not necessary that such passports should bear the visa of the Turkish Consul at Bombay.

MR. F. B. Peacock, Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government, is the civilian who has been selected from Bengal for a seat on the Public Service Commission. He has accepted the appointment. Syud Ahmed Khan, C.S.I., will be one of the representatives of the North-West-Provinces on the Commission.

THE P. and O. Company's steamship Khiva has been placed on the hydraulic lift at Hog Island. The lift will be a valuable addition to the dry dock accommodation in Bombay.

THERE is some probability that St. Andrew's Day will be celebrated in Bombay by a dinner, at which it is hoped the Governor will preside, and Lord Rosebery will be a guest.

It has been resolved to hold the usual dinner on St. Andrew's Day in the Town Hall of Calcutta. Mr. George Yule, the Sheriff, will probably take the chair.

THE Englishman gives currency to a report that the salaries of all Government railway employés are to be reduced ten per cent. all round from the 1st of January next for the sake of economy.

THE REV. I. W. ADAMS, V.C., accompanies the Commander-in-Chief to Burma.

Colonel Ben Williams, Director of Army Remount Operations in India, who has been on special duty in Persia for some months, reaches Bombay this week. He has managed to purchase 300 good remounts out of the 500 he required, and has paved the way for a further supply being sent from time to time.

On the breaking up of the Boundary Commission Major-Holdich and Captain the Hon. M. G. Talbot, R.E., will leave for England. Captain Gore, R.E., on the other hand, will probably remain in India, and devote the present cold weather to perfecting the boundary survey plans at Dehra.

MR. F. J. GRAHAM HATCHELL, Assistant District Superintendent of Police, Delhi, who was injured in the recent riots, has obtained furlough to Europe for two years, with effect from the 1st November.

COUNT DE GEBURNATIS, it appears, was not the first European to be invested with the sacred thread that a Hindoo Brahmin alone can wear. Colonel Olcott, when in Calcutta some time ago, received the same honour from the late Pundit Taranath Vychaspatti.

The Official Summary from Mandalay, dated 31st October, states that, but for one dacoity, the town is quiet. In the district, Shan dacoits continue troublesome. A strong force was sent during the week to occupy Yabingalay, south-east of Mandalay. They came upon dacoits who had stockaded a pass in the hills. One sepoy was killed and three wounded, and Lieutenant Glanvillewas also wounded. The troops occupied Yabingalay. A raid by Ka-Chins is reported to have taken place sixteen miles souch of Bhamo. The Shwebo dacoits are somewhat active. Myinmyoo is still disturbed by Hla-Oo-and his gang. Pagan and Myingyan are fairly quiet. Western Myingyan is disturbed. At Menbo the dacoits have displayed much activity. Two encounters during the week have taken place with them, and a part of Minhla has been burnt. The Yemethen Deputy Commissioner successfully attacked the rebel Theingong Shwegyee, killed three of his men, and captured his camp. The chief rebel leaders in the Yemethen district have gone south. The situation in Yemethen and Nyingyan is improving to some extent.

Notes of the Meek.

TELEGRAMS received in London to-day state that Lord Dufferin returned to Bombay on the 14th inst. after a short cruise, but that he was still suffering from the effects of a slight attack of fever. He left on Friday, and is expected at Hyderabad to-morrow.

At Bombay, in reply to an address of the Municipality, this Excellency paid that body a high compliment, saying that he knew no corporation imbued with a more enlightened, progressive, and practical spirit. He regretted the difficulty which it experienced in raising money at a reasonable rate of interest, but hoped that the increasing confidence felt in its reputation would speedily supply the required guarantee.

In distributing the prizes to the Bombay School of Art Lord Dufferin did not commit himself on the matter of education. Avoiding the falsehood of extremes he expressed his great interest in the subject of artistic and technical education, the prosecution of which he believed would be one of the most fertile sources of the prosperity of India. At the same time he wished to say that the encouragement of technical education by the Government did not imply any want of appreciation of the admirable system of higher education so happily established in the ecountry.

THE latest news from Upper Burma given in the Times telegram, which will be found in another column, is not pleasant news. Dacoity still flourishes, and valuable lives on our side continue to be sacrificed in this most unsatisfactory guerilla kind of warfare.

The most unsatisfactory report amongst the many unsatisfactory reports from Upper Burma is that which tells of the great sickness amongst the troops which we have sent there. The climate is now as it was in our previous wars with Burma, the most dangerous foe to the soldier. In the campaign, which ended in the annexation of the fertile province of Pegu, besides the cost of two millions of money to the Indian Government, there was a terrible sacrifice of valuable lives. Between January, 1852, and May, 1853, upwards of fifty officers and nearly fifteen hundred European soldiers and two thousand Sepoys died from disease alone, exclusive of any killed or wounded in action.

It is stated, on the authority of a correspondent of one of our morning contemporaries, that at present, out of 20,000 of the force in Upper Burma, 2,000 are hors de combat from sickness—a statement which we hope later advices will show to be somewhat exaggerated. But the official Returns which have reached England show that the climate has been telling very severely upon the troops, Europeans and Natives.

WE cannot, however, believe that the treatment of our wounded has been correctly described by the Rangoon Times. That journal says:—

We wish to draw public attention to the inhuman manner in which soldiers who are wounded or invalided on service in Burma are treated. We remarked yesterday that they were experiencing great hardships, and receiving a very meagre allowance from the Commissariat Department, and it has come to our knowledge that these poor fellows, some wounded, and others in the last stage of dysentery, are put on board the steamers without beds or proper attention, and, in fact, without proper arrangements being made with the steamers as to messing. Men who are mere living skeletons are occasionally to be seen lying on the bare decks, and the diet the medical authorities seem to think best for men wounded or suffering from dysentery is that vile compound known as Chicago beef, dry biscuits, and a little tea and sugar screwed up in a piece of dirty gunny.

There must surely be some misinformation or exaggeration in the above. The history which gave to the world such sad details of neglect and mismanagement in the Crimea in 1854 cannot surely be repeating itself in Burma in 1886.

In the various obituary notices which have appeared recording the services of the late Sir Herbert Macpherson, one incident in his life full of incidents seems to have been forgotten or overlooked. He was wounded under tragic circumstances on one occasion. He was out shooting with a brother officer near Aden, and, night setting in, they obtained shelter from the chief of a Somali village. Sir Herbert, it is said, had (as soldiers often have) a presentiment of evil, and, strange enough to say, his companion was also in low spirits. They had retired to rest, when there was a sudden rush of an Arab upon them, and, before the General could leap from his bed, the intruder had slashed at and disembowelled his sleeping friend. Sir Herbert threw himself upon the murderer, and engaged in a desperate struggle with him until assistance arrived. He was, however, very severely wounded. The Arab was subsequently publicly executed at Aden.

THE English Press in India generally approves of the new scheme for the organisation of the Native Army, considering it to be a very decided improvement upon the present system. But attention is called to one very serious drawback. The "linked" battalions are still to remain independent of each other during times of peace, and it is only when war has broken out that the regiments will practically become one. It is true that Sepoys are to be enlisted on the understanding that they will be liable to be transferred from their own regiment to one that may be on active service; but such a transfer, when it means leaving home to fight at Candahar, Herat, or some other point far beyond the frontier, will not often be a welcome change for the Sepoy. He will in most cases think it a hardship; and, if he has not been accustomed to see such changes made from the beginning of his service, he will be apt to think it an injustice as well. The terms of enlistment may be perfectly clear, but after serving ten or twelve years with the regiment in which he originally enlisted without having once seen that rule put into operation, the average Native soldier can hardly be expected to fall naturally into the arrangement. On the contrary, he will be apt to resent being called upon to discharge an obligation which he has probably by that time made up his mind that he has escaped altogether. If the new rule is not to cause serious discontent, it must be made part of the regular routine in times both of peace and war, as is the case with European linked regiments. Until this is done the linked battalions can only be said to exist on paper, and unfortunately the test of practical experience is being reserved for the very time when a miscarriage would be productive of a maximum of mischief, and when any attempt to tutor the troops into a theoretical knowledge of the system would be out of the question.

THE apostles of total abstinence have done much good in India in winning the British soldier into habits of sobriety and self-denial, which favourably contrast with the state of things which at one time existed in the army in the sunny East. But the best of intentions may be carried too far. It is no little credit which the advocates of the temperance movement can justly claim to themselves in the fact that nearly one-fifth of the European rank and file in the three Presidencies are total abstainers. This, however, does not justify any attempt to force total abstinence upon the remainder, who take and relish a glass or two of good beer. Yet this is what some well-meaning enthusiasts in the cause of temperance would like to do. Having succeeded, and very properly too, in getting the Government to discourage the old practice of serving out a ration of rum to every soldier, young or old, at midday, summer or winter, they would now have the authorities interfere with the beer drinkers. Under prosent rules these men can obtain at the regimental canteens as much beer as they can pay for, so long as it is drunk on the premises and the consumers are sober. The "apostles" would have this stopped.

And for the following reason. They hold that the beer now sold to the troops is beer brewed in India, which beer has a greater alcoholic strength than beer brewed in England and exported to the East. This, however, is an assertion that requires proof. The beer brewed in India after the expenditure of much labour and capital on the part of the brewers—has turned out to be an honest, wholesome compound, much relished by the men, and very favourably reported upon by commanding and medical officers. It has necessarily a little more body than the light beers consumed in England, for otherwise it could never stand the variations of the Indian climate, especially the damp, clammy heat of the monsoons. But the beer imported from England for the troops had to be fortified against these climatic influences too, and was often more "heady" than sound notwithstanding. It is no secret that some of the English brewers have felt aggrieved at their excusion from the Indian supply owing to the Government of India giving its contracts to the local brewers, and pressure would be brought to bear, if possible, upon the Secretary of State for India to alter this arrangement. But, of course, the temperance advocates are not influenced by any other motive except anxiety for the well-being, morally and physically, of the soldier.

In this anxiety they can, however, allow their fears to be lulled to rest. The medical officers throughout the various stations of India are constantly taking the Indian brewers unawares by obtaining samples from the brewery cellars or go-downs. These samples are being continually subjected to most careful analysis, so that Tommy Atkins is fairly well looked after in the matter of being protected against too "heady" beer.

THE Indian brewers would perhaps be only too delighted to turn out the "weak and washy" stuff so often sold in England as beer, for then their malt would go much further, but the climate is on the side of honesty and good liquor, and does not allow of this being done. The soldier benefits and the cause of temperance does not suffer.

THE hearing of a claim preferred by a Madras servant in an Australian Court appears to have given some diffi-culty to the local magistrate there. The complainant culty to the local magistrate there. stated that he would be sworn on the Koran, but no such book was part of the properties of the court-house. It was suggested to swear him on a copy of the "Arabian Nights" but the manifestation and the state of the st but the magistrate would not give in to this pious fraud, and took the matter up in a firm and original way of his own. He explained to counsel and the Court that, as Madras was on the borders of China, the plaintiff was balf a Chinaman, and could be sworn by blowing out a match, which ceremony was accordingly gone through. We quite agree with an Indian contemporary, who is esponsible for the story, that it is difficult which to admire most-the familiarity of the learned magistrate of the Antipodes with geography or the reasoning by which a Madras Mussalman was converted for the occasion into half a Chinaman, or the easy grace with which the religious test of a Buddhist was made to apply to a follower of Mahommed.

THE Political Resident at the Persian Gulf has been requested by the Government of India to procure the best kinds of seeds and offsets of the date palm for experimental cultivation in the Punjab.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS has put an end, in India, to the objectionable practice of using tubs as a means of serving out beer to soldiers frequenting the canteen. Beer engines are to be used with effect from January 1st.

CALCUTTA, Nov. 21.

Nothing definite is known respecting the Ghilzai insurrection, Nothing definite is known respecting the Galizzi insurrection, but it is clear that the troubles are by no means at an end. A Lahore newspaper states that the members of a caravan, which arrived in Pishin on the 13th inst. from Cabul, viâ Ghuzni, brought news that prolonged fighting was still going on when they left Ghuzni, about the 2nd inst, that the Ameer's troops and the rebels had several times repulsed one another with heavy loss, the rebels had several times repulsed one another with heavy loss, and resumed their original positions, and that the Ghilzais had sent a message to their tribesmen serving in the Ameer's regiments at Herat, urging them to rebel. The headman of the caravan also stated that a report was current in Ghuzni that the Ameer had been assassinated at Jellalabad.

News had arrived from the British outposts at Chaman that the Cabul-Candahar road was still closed by the fighting, but that a letter from the Ameer had reached Candahar, announcing a great defeat of the rebels, and stating that four Candabari regiments from Farah were marching to Candahar. All was quiet in southern Afghanistan, and the Durinas had volunteered to collect and fight against the Ghilzais.

Some British troops in the Quetta district, including half a battalion of the Loyal North Lancashire, a mountain battery, and detachments of Native cavalry and infantry, have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness to march to the frontier posts. This is doubtless a precautionary measure due to the Ghilzzi troubles.

The reports from various districts in Lower Burma continue to be unsatisfactory. Dacoity is generally prevalent.

The Rangoon Gazette to-day announces that there are four gangs of dacoits at large in the Pegu district, and that in the Shoagyeen district, Toomyoung, a village near a station on the Sittang Railway, has been looted by a gang of forty dacoits.

The Rangoon Times reports a daring attack by a gang of dacoits on a house in the town of Moulmein. Two dacoits were killed and one wounded by volunteers who turned out.

General complaints are made of the defective police arrangements.

The details of the recent engagement with the Kyimindine Prince's force have been received. The insurgents were surprised and attacked at the point of the bayonet. Twenty were killed and many wounded, our only casualty being Lieutenant Eckersley, who was struck with three slugs in the abdomen. The Kyimindine Prince was wounded while escaping, and a woman, said to be his wife, was killed by a stray shot. A considerable quantity of arms were captured. Colonel Anderson was shot through the neck, and four Sepoys were killed and four wounded. The loss of the enemy was heavy. #### ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF. (Bombay Gazette.)

There is no need to point out to anyone who has enjoyed the privilege of reading Sir M. E. Grant Duff's Review of the Administration of the Madras Presidency during the past five years that every line of it has been written by his own hand. It is all about Sir M. E. Grant Duff; it is all characteristic and some of it eulogistic of Sir M. E. Grant Duff; and it is all so precisely like him that no intruding pen can have marred the fair surface of Sir M. E. Grant Duff's foolscap. He writes at his own will and in his own way. He is now eloquent, and didactic, now familiar, now funny. Friends in England who may be awaiting his return with a fear lest five years spent under the burning sun of Ootacamund, and of latitudes where it burns a little more than it does on the Neilgherries, may have enervated that brilliant man and dimmed the brightness of his intelligence will be reassured when they read this remarkable State paper. His jokes alone will satisfy them that he is all that he ever was, and perhaps a little more. They will see in his allusion to the "Rumpa rumpus" that his play of fancy is as fine as ever it was. They will see in in his playful decision that an attempt to turn Cochin lagoon into a harbour would make "three-quarters of a million sterling look very foolish," a cheerful illustration of a new method of brightening an Indian State paper by substituting choice Americanisms for the ponderous proprieties of official paragraphing. They will be comforted, too, by certain dexterous triflings about ugly incidents which we can plainly see are meant to do duty for the tiger stories and the snake stories which more frivolous Anglo-Indians pack in the portmanteaus of an imaginative memory when they prepare for setting out for Europe. This, for instance, will beat most of the stories that are told over a peg and cheroot at 14, St. James's Square:—"As to Bellary, I well remember being informed at Sandur that a few days before I was there a panther jumped on the back of a letter-carrier, tore open his bag and disappeared into the jungle, whether with or without the letter which he presumably desired to possess himself of my informant did not say." A good panther story like this is such a striking improvement to a State paper that it is a thousand pities that Sir M. E. Grant Duff's informant did not finish it. But perhaps the too cunning panther took possession of some title-deeds which enterprising civilians will think are well out of the way in the jungle. There is another story which has nothing to do with panthers, but which may have very much to do with other things about which Madras has been talking very much of late. In talking in his pleasant unconventional way of the investment of English capital in Indian agriculture, the Governor tells us, "I English capital in Indian agriculture, the Governor tells us, "I once said to a friend 'How do the —s get on with their estate?' 'Excellently,' was the reply, 'their father gives them the money to work it.' 'And what return does he get?' I rejoined. 'Oh, the return he gets is that one of them periodically returns to him.' C'est magnifique, mais ce n'est pas le commerce.' A capital story this, too, and not difficult to localise if only the "S." were printed at the beginning of the name instead of at the end. It would be a pity to bind within the forbidding covers of an ordinary blue book so merry a production as this. It should appear as a "holiday number" of the Madras Gazette, with a picture, say, of "holiday number" of the Madras Gazette, with a picture, say, of an absconding panther for a frontispiece.

Yet Sir M. E. Grant Duff is now and again slightly serious. He tells us, in quite other words it is true, that he has not been half as great a disturber of the peace of Madras as he might have been. He tells us that his first impulse on coming to India was to try to make the institutions amid which he found himself as like as circumstances would permit to the l'arliamentary institutions which he had left behind in England. From this "natural and generous error" he was saved, he says, by various circumstances, amongst which he does not include the all-sufficient circumstance that the limitations imposed upon a Provincial Governor in India refuse him an opportunity for making experiments of that kind. The field was wide enough, nevertheless, everifor so ambitious a labourer, and there was nothing in it beyond the range of either his knowledge or his interest. Financial decentralisation was under discussion when he arrived here. He had been at the India Office when Lord Mayo's scheme was started, and so he knew all about it. Sir M. E. Grant Duff's predominant conviction on the subject is that decentralisation should be decentralisation—a conviction from which the most captious amongst us will not dissent. His ideas about land revenue are not so clearly expressed, but we gather from a footnote that his supreme criterion of the excellence of a revenue system is the smalla ss of arrears. "Nous avons changé tout cela" he says when he tells of the sixty-two lakhs of arrears before the famine now brought down to twenty-two. If the bringing down was wisely and considerately done we have no objection. But a word on the subject would have been acceptable. In much the same way he glances with a playful glance at the agricultural condition of the Presidency. Only a skiltul pen like his could have told us so much about the condition of the agriculturists. Under the subhead of "cattle" we get this valuable information:—"No one can move much about Southern India without seeing that cattle are of the most enormous importance to the population. In some exceptional tracts he may be gratified by the appearance of the animals, but in most they are undersized, weakly, and have to fight during a considerable portion of the year a very hard battle to live at all." The same thing might have been said of crows without teaching us much about the condition of the forty millions included in Sir M. E. Grant Duff's satrapy. He does, indeed, endcavour to draw some inference from the facts that he here relates, though it is only a half inference, and even for a half inference it is absurd. Cattle are starving on rocky wastes, but the reason cannot be because there is not enough for them to eat, since "Mr. Robertson points out that Belgium possesses 569 head of cattle per square mile and calculates ours at 104 per square mile." As though while the agriculture of the Low Countries is what it is and the agriculture of Southern India is what it is, any comparison between the cattle-feeding capabilities of the two countries could be other than unreasonable and unreal! There is one significant admission in the minute which might well have served as a starting point for an inquiry into the very question which the writer avoids. He admits that the margin of cultivable land that remained to be brought under cultivation has now been taken up. "There is very little really good land remaining to be added to the arable soil," the Governor of Madras says, and hence, as cultivation cannot become more extensive it must become more intensive. "Take to high farming" he tells the Madras ryots, much as lofty benevolence has from of old sought to comfort the empty stomach with its fat "be thou filled." He has covered many pages with his dissertations about the agriculture of the Presidency; but he has not told us much.

However, he can write entertaining minutes, and if he had left nothing more than this remarkable paper "for a perpetual memorial" to the people of Madras, he would be remembered only as an interesting, if somewhat eccentric person.

THE REORGANISATION OF THE NATIVE ARMY. (Times of India.)

A general order has been issued by the Government of India, which makes changes in the Indian Army more fundamental and more sweeping than any that have been introduced since the Staff Corps was set on foot a quarter of a century ago. But the Staff Corps system had an influence wholly baleful upon the noble service it was supposed to reform. It revolutionised the Indian Army, and completely unsettled and undermined the whole fabric. We are glad to see that the changes now introduced are meant, to have, and doubtless will have, a precisely opposite effect. They will reorganise and consolidate our Native regiments upon a firm and thoroughly military basis, and, by their liberality towards the sepoys, they will attach them more firmly to the rulers who have done so much for them. The changes introduced by the new regulations are numerous and varied, so numerous and varied that we cannot deal fully with the whole subject in a single article. The question of linked battalions, of the long waited for reserve, and kindred points we must hold overfor another time. To-day we propose to call the attention of our readers to the abolition of what has long been a very great scandal in the Native army, viz, the way that sepoys were forced to malinger before they could claim their pensions. Let us briefly, and for the last time, romind our readers what the system was under which pensions were granted in the Native army, and then the value and importance of the change now introduced will be at once apparent.

In the first place, then, the sepoy was enlisted—it is a great pleasure to be able to write in the past tense—for the natural period of his life. That is to say, from 1796 to 1877, his term of service with the colours was forty years; in 1877, it was reduced to thirty-two years. But it was enacted that, if, before he completed his full period of service, and after he had scrved fifteen years, he became unfit by reason of sickness, or was disabled by wounds, then he had to appear before a medical board, on whose recommendation he could obtain a modified pension of Rs. 4 per mensem. The consequences of this order might easily have been foreseen. For very many years past, it has filled the hospitals of our Native regiments with malingerers. It is easy enough to blame the sepoys for this, and to say that malingerers ought to be severely punished, but in reality, Government has been far more to blame than the men. This very month of November has witnessed, we are glad to think for the last time, the assembling of those regimental boards, which meet once a year to decide what sepoys shall be sent up before the general invaliding committee. It presents a curious scene, this preliminary committee, which consists of the commanding officer, the adjutant, and the regimental surgeon. They meet in the mess most likely, and outside in the mess compound is assembled a motley crowd of sepoys, all candidates for pension. If anyone not in the secret were to pass by the mess, he would never guess that the men sitting about with heads bound up, with sticks and crutches, giving utterance to groens and hollow coughs, were the same sepoys who generally look so smart and soldier-like. But so it is. They are trying to get their pensions, and, as the Sirkar in its wisdom will only grant it on condition that they are ill and broken down, they naturally try and appear as ill and broken down as possible. But now, the try and appear as ill and broken down as possible. But now, the committee having assembled, the adjutant calls out the name of Private Ram Bux. Then there is a pause, and then a figure, supporting itself on a kind of improvised crutch, its face tightly bound in a cloth, and its whole frame apparently tottering with weakness, slowly approaches the committee. "Looks very ill," says the colonel, "what's the matter with him?" "He's the biggest schemes in the recipient." very ill," says the colonel, "what's the matter with him?" "He's the biggest schemer in the regiment," says the doctor, consulting a record, "he's been in hospital a hundred and fifty-one days already this year, and there's nothing the matter with him." So Ram Bux is told to go about his business, and warned to serve the Sirkar with zeal and energy, whereupon Ram Rux begins to weep, and to detail all his ailments. These being abruply cut short, he is ordered to go to the lines, whither he departs weeping, but with a firm intention to go on malingering for another year, in the hope that at last the doctor saheb will be tired out, and will be only too glad to get rid of him. The next name called out by be only too glad to get rid of him. The next name called out by the adjutant is that of Private Ramjee, who walks up tolerably briskly, and stands to attention before the committee. "Looks very well," says the colonel, "eighteen years' service. What's the matter with him?" "He's only been once in hospital during the last eighteen months," says the doctor, again consulting his record: "it's not the slightest use sending a healthy-looking fellow like that, who has a clean hospital sheet, before the general invaliding committee; they won't look at him;" and so Private Ramjee is sent to the lines, after telling the committee that all his family affairs are in the greatest confusion; that, if he can't get his pension, there is no one to look after his interests in his village, and that this means something like ruin to him; and, finally, that he has done eighteen years' faithful service, and hopes he may be allowed his pension of four rupees per mensem. But the committee have no power to help him, and so he, too, be only too glad to get rid of him. The next name called out by nopes he may be allowed his pension of four rupees per mensem. But the committee have no power to help him, and so he, too, goes to the lines, determing also to spend most of his time next year in hospital; and so one sepoy has been sent to the lines because he goes to hospital too much, and the other because he has been not enough. In fact, under this monstrous system, the obtaining a pension too often degenerated into a game of skill between surgeon and sepoy, which could out-manœuvre or tire out the other. out the other.

But, as we said before, the new rules have put an end, once and for all, to this bad old state of things, with which our Indian military readers must be only too familiar, and which we have persistently denounced year after year. The exact wording of the new order is as follows, and, though it abolishes the greatest goodel in the Indian Array art we have that some of its provithe new order is as follows, and, though it abolishes the greatest scandal in the Indian Army, yet we hope that some of its provisions may be improved hereafter. It runs thus:—"The present invalid pension after fifteen years is abolished prospectively for all soldiers enlisted after the 30th November, 1886, and, in lieu thereof, the ordinary pension will be granted to all soldiers on completion of twenty-one years' service in the regular army. The ordinary pension is also admissible after twenty-one years' service to all men now in the army. The superior rate of pension will continue to be granted after thirty-two years' service under the present rules. This change does not apply to strictly local corps." From this it will be seen that every Sepoy can now claim his pension after serving twenty one years with the colours. We wish the period fixed on had been twenty instead of twenty-one years; but, at any rate, it is an enormous gain to know that, wish the perica fixed on had been twenty instead of twenty-one years; but, at any rate, it is an enormous gain to know that, when Jack Sepoy has put in his twenty-one years, he will be able to claim his pension as a right in an honest, manly fashion, instead of having to degrade and lower himself by malingering for it. As we said before, we hall this innovation as one of the greatest boons that could be conferred on the Native Army, and one that will go far to restore the waning popularity of the army with the classes it is most desirable to attract, the classes that answer in some respects to our English village yeomen. It is true that the present invaliding committees will be continued annually for the men now serving; but, with the certainty of a pension after twenty-one years' service, malingering will practically cease, and the committee will revert to its legitimate functions of a pension after twenty-one years' service. tion of procuring an early pension for sepoys whose health has really broken down while in the ranks.

BENGAL.

Considerable success attended some experiments made last year at the Khorda Government estate in Orissa in the growth of the Nankin-khaki coloured cotton; and there can be but little doubt that the cultivation of this cotton might become an important item in the trade of the division. The difficulty at present seems to be the cost of its production, as the military authorities, who are now the chief consumers, are unable to offer the rates asked for it by the Orissa cultivators.

THE Finance Committee has for some time been engaged in examining the heads of the various provincial departments at Calcutta. Among those who have appeared before it are Dr. Lethbridge, Irspector-General of Jails; Mr. Blyth, Inspector-General of Registration; Mr. Veasey, Inspector-General of Police; Mr. Finucane, Director of Agriculture; Dr. King, Superintendent of the Botanical Gardens, Calcutta, and of the Government Cinchona Plantation, Darjeeling; Mr. Croft, Director-General of Education; and Colonel Trovor and Major Harrison. The Committee is now engaged in discussing its proposals with the Lieutenant-Governor; and when this is over, it will prepare its reports and return to Calcutta.

An application which was made before the Chief Presidency Magistrate at Calcutta the other day indicates that the social reform movement is in some quarters taking a turn not contemplated by Mr. Malabari. A Mahomedan woman appeared before Mr. Gordon Leith and applied for permission to remarry during the lifetime of her husband. The woman stated that for some time past she had been separated from her husband, who had given her no support, and, as now there was a young man, also a Mahomedan, who was willing to make her his wife, she would be glad if the Court would grant her permission to marry him. The Magistrate said he was sorry he could not help her in a matter of this sort, and the woman is reported to have left the Court looking very disappointed. looking very disappointed.

MADRAS.

MADRAS.

According to present arrangements, the visit of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General at Pondicherry will be of very short duration; he is to arrive by special train from Tanjore at 7 A.M., on the 9th December, and to leave in the evening of the same day. There will be an official reception at Government House at about eight o'clock in the morning, a State breakfast, and a farewell tiffin in the afternoon, but here the programme ends. It is needless to add that the whole of Pondicherry is in deep despair, for all sorts of grand doings were spoken of, and to some extent arranged for. In fact, the Administration, the Municipality, and the unofficial citizens had made up their minds to make a red-letter day of the occasion of the distinguished honour conferred upon them by the visit of the representative of the Queen-Empress, and to never mind the expense. never mind the expense.

THE separation of the Church from the State in the French-Indian Colonies is believed, in Pondicherry, as likely to become an accomplished fact at a very early date. Under the present an accomplished fact at a very early date. Under the present arrangement the Home Government pays the expenses of the Ecclesiastical Department provided for the European congregations, while the "Foreign Missionary Society" takes care of Native Christians. The cost to the State, though not heavy—viz., from 20,000 to 25,000 francs pear year, has been a subject of warm discussion by the Colonial Budget Committee for several years past but no satisfactory settlement could be arrived at years past, but no satisfactory settlement could be arrived at. Now, however, the "Mission" has come forward offering to administer to the spiritual wants of both Europeans and Natives, and to undertake the whole of the clerical duties, at its own expense. The Minister of Religion is said to be opposed to the plan; but it is generally thought that the Chamber will refuse to vote the supply for the cost of the establishments in the next financial budget, which comes on for discussion next month.

Much alarm has been caused in Madras by the orders of the Government of India to close the Powder Factory. The Chamber of Commerce has protested against the measure. It alludes to its letter on the same subject in March last year and to the joint memorial which the Chamber and the Trades Association for-warded in November, 1872, to the Secretary of State deprecating the adoption of proposals for the abolition of the Gun Carriage and Powder Factories in Madras, and refers to the late imminence of war between India and Russia, to the present anxious political outlook, to the requirements of Burma which are now met from Madras, to the inability of the Bengal and Bombay Factories overtaking local demands, and to the probability of those Factories being unable to supply Madras. It indicates the danger depending upon the maintenance of railway communication in time of foreign war or internal commotion. The Chamber takes the opportunity to say that a small arms factory is much needed in Madras, and great risk is run by Madras being dependent on the factories of Dum-Dum and Kirkce. It maintains that as formerly, so now, the possession by Madras of the military factories would not only contribute to the security of this Presidency, but also afford a reserve of strength to Bengal and Bombay when their own stores are subjected to rapid repletion. The Chamber considers it indispensable for the safety of the country and trade that military featuries should not be recorded from a financial point of view factories should not be regarded from a financial point of view, like spinning mills, but their value should be gauged primarily with regard to their capabilities in time of war.

BOMBAY.

COLUMEL BISSET, R.E., Agent of the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India and Rajputana-Malwa Railway, will accompany the Viceroy during his tour along these lines.

THE Parsees of Ahmedabad have contributed the sum of Rs. 506 to the Parsee Lying-in Asylum Fund, through Mr. C. M. Cursetjee, the Judge of the Court of Small Causes.

MR. DINSHAW MANOCKJEE PETIT has made a donation of Rs. 5,000 to the Bai Sakarbai Dinshaw Petit Hospital for Animals, in memory of his grandson, Ardesir, Cowasjee Petit, deceased. A Durwar was held at Kolapore on the evening of the 30th to say good-bye to Mr. Lee-Warner; also a farewell dinner was given to him by the station. The large gathering of Native gentlemen after dinner testified to the general regret at losing so able and popular a Political officer.

MISSES. GOSTLING AND MORRIS, architects, of Bombay, have taken out a patent for coolers "for the purpose of cooling the water used in lowering the temperature of, or condensing the ether or similar chemicals used in the manufacture of ice and cooling liquids, and for the purpose of cooling the injection water used in condensing the steam employed in working the steam engines of ice and other machines and of prime-movers generated.

Considerable sensation was caused in the bazaar by the circulation of a rumour that a party of troops had perpetrated shocking outrages upon some Native women who were passengers on board the B.I.S.N. Co.'s steamer Pachumba; but an inquiry into the matter showed that some jostling which sometimes occurs when persons are embarking on board ship had been n agnified and contorted into the commission of heinous crimes. It appears that about 160 European troops, who are to embark on board the troopship Crocodile for England, were proceeding in the steamer from Kurrachee to this port, with about 200 Native passengers. The vessel called at Mangrole, where about 80 or 90 Native passengers. sengers. The vessel called at Mangrole, where about 80 or 90 Native passengers were taken on board from boats. They entered the vessel on the lower deck where the troops were stationed, the Natives having the upper deck set apart for them. The embarkation took place in the presence of Lieutenant Carlton and the officers of the ship, when nothing of an unusual character occurred. On the arrival of the ship in port a mumber of these passengers handed a letter to Mr. Mackerness, the commander, complaining that the chastity of their women had been violated when they came on the vessel, and that a box had been stolen. The allegations were inquired into by the Company's agent, and it was ascertained that there was no truth in the grave assertions that had been made, the troops having conducted themselves well.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

THE state of health of the Rajas of Jhind and Nabha is now said to be such as will not prevent them from beingpresent at the Lahore Durbar.

THE Lahore paper says:—"No further news has leaked out regarding Sir Charles Aitchison's successor. It seems very likely that the Viceroy will give it out when he comes to Lahore; and in some quarters the name of Mr. J. B. Lyall is now freely mentioned as the probable successor."

A LITTLE DIFFICULTY.—Sir Krishna Das of Delhi has stated, in reply to a letter from Government asking for his opinion on the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill sent to him, that if the Bill had been in Urdu he would have gladly given his opinion, but as it is in English he is unable to do so. Orders have, therefore, been given for the distribution of Urdu copies of the Bill.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.—At a meeting of European Uncovenanted Officers, held at Lahore on the 19th ult., it was arranged to address his Honour the Lieutenaut-Governor on the subject of the Public Service Commission, and to inquire whether the Government of India will make provision for the adequate representation of the European Uncovenanted Service in India, by the appointment of some European Uncovenanted Officers as members of that Commission, in accordance with the assurance given in the House of Common by Siz Like Contact. given in the House of Commons by Sir John Gorst, that every interest concerned would be fairly represented on the Commission—an assurance which the Government of India have not as yet acted upon. The Punjab Uncovenanted Service having thus taken the lead in defence of the claims of their service, the members of the Uncovenanted Service in the other Provinces should . lose no time in following their example.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

PREVIOUS to the retirement of Major-General Leslie, R.A., late Inspector-General of Artillery in India, the Artillery Staff at Army Head Quarters consisted of an Inspector-General of Artillery, whose duty it was to travel about during the cold weather, accompanied by his Brigade-Major of Artillery, and inspect the various batteries throughout India. His tours were so arranged that he inspected most batteries at least once in every two or that he inspected most batteries at least once in every two or three years. In addition to the Inspector-General and his Brigade - Major, there was a Deputy Adjutant - General of Artillery, of the rank of Colonel, with an Assistant Adjutant-General of Artillery, a Major. The Deputy Adjutant-General of Artillery was the channel of communication with the Commander-in-Chief for all Artillery matters, and took his orders direct from his Excellency. It is now proposed to re-arrange these four appointments, and in place of four Artillery officers at Army Headquarters, viz., an Inspector-General of Artillery, with a Brigade-Major, a Deputy Adjutant-General, and an Assistant Adjutant-General, to have only two, viz., an Inspector-General of Artillery, who will also be the confidential adviser of the Commander-in-Chief in all Artillery matters, and adviser of the Commander-in-Chief in all Artillery matters, and work directly under his Excellency's orders, and so combine the offices of Inspector-General and Deputy Adjutant-General of Artillery, and an Assistant Adjutant-General of the rank of Lieut.-Colonel, who will, under the orders of the Inspector-General, carry on the work of the office. The Inspector-General of Artillery will be liable for inspection duty, as the late Inspector-General, at the orders of the Commander-in-Chief; and for inspection duties he will be granted the services of a Brigade-Major during the time his inspections may continue.

IT is believed that Colonel Alured Johnson, C.B., R.A., will fill the appointment of Inspector-General of Artillery under the new arrangement, with a Lieutenant-Colonel, Royal Artillery, not yet named, as his Assistant Adjutant-General.

MAJOR LUGARD, the officer at present holding the appointment of Brigade-Major, Royal Artillery in India, which is to be abolished, will revert to regimental duty.

THE present deputy Adjutant-General of Artillery, Colonel Minto Elliot, it is believed, purposes retiring in the spring, when the period of Staff Service of Major Keith, R.A., the present Assistant Adjutant-General of Artillery, will expire; and opportunity may then be found to bring the new arrangement into

On the termination of his duty with the Afghan Boundary Commission, Captain W. Polcock, R.E., is appointed to the Military Works Department as an attached officer, and posted to the Meerut command.

THE second battalion of the 5th Goorkha Regiment is to be raised at Abbottabad. The 1st Battalion and the 42nd, 43rd, and 44th Goorkha Light Infantry Regiments are to be allowed to give volunteers up to a maximum of 100 each, to form a nucleus for the new battalion. The importance of Abbottabad as a military station will thus be perceptibly increased, the garrison being two battalions of Goorkhas and a battalion of Sikh or Punjab infantry.

THE Gazette of India Simla, October 29, contains the following notifications:—A good service pension is granted to Colonel Delafosse, late 101st Fusiliers. Colonel Gellie, Bengal Staff Corps, is allowed to retire from the service. Captain Mahon is appointed Assistant Superintendent of Factories. Captain Jervois is appointed Commissary of Ordnance of the third class; Captain Waller, Additional Commissary of Ordnance of the third class; and Lieutenant Watkins, Commissary of Ordnance of the fourth class. Deputy Surgeon-Generals Planck and Bellew are allowed to retire from the service. Major-General Hancock is appointed to retire from the service. Major-General Hancock is appointed to special duty under the Government of India.

CONFIDENTIAL REPORTS IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

The following General Order regarding the preparation of confidential reports on the officers of the Army has been published by the Commander-in-Chief :-

"The Commander-in-Chief in India desires to impress upon all officers in command the necessity of repeating more fully than is at present the practice on the professional qualifications of the officers serving under them, more especially the senior regimental and staff officers.

"It is on these annual confidential reports that his Excellency must chiefly rely in selecting officers for promotion, for the staff and higher commands, and it is therefore essential that they should be precise and definite in character, and, above all, that they should be based on a personal knowledge of the officers reported on.

"To be of any practical use a confidential report must contain full information regarding the officer's professional acquirements, his zeal for the service, his personal activity and physical qualifications for the field; and his judgment and discretion in dealing with others and conducting military business. It is not sufficient to say that an officer is a good commandant, or second in command, or staff officer, as the case may be; what is required is a reliable opinion whether the officer possesses the qualifications which would be likely to render him valuable in positions higher than that which he may hold at the time.

"To enable a General Officer to form such an opinion, it is essential that he should have a personal acquaintance with the senior officers under his command; and, in order that the Commander-in-Chief may fully benefit by this knowledge, it is of the first importance that there should be no hesitation on the part of the General in freely communicating to His Excellency the opinion he may have formed.

"Should circumstances have rendered it impossible for a General Officer to gain an intimate knowledge of any officer gerving under him it should be so stated in the report, and the Commander-in-Chief must then depend upon former reports, of on the opinions of others who may have had opportunities or judging of the officer in question.

"Whenever an adverse report of an officer is made, it should invariably be communicated to that officer at the time, and a notification that this has been done should be entered on the report when it is submitted for His Excellency's information."

ROHILKUND AND KUMAON RAILWAY COMPANY.—Major-General J. S. Trevor, C.S.I., who presided at the meeting, said they would have probably wondered why the Directors had proposed a dividend of £2 7s. per cent for the half-year when the accounts showed of £2 7s. per cent. for the half-year when the accounts showed that the earnings for that period would really have yielded nearly. £2 17s. 6d. per cent. on their paid-up capital, subject, however to income-tax. The dividend of £2 7s. per cent. was equal within three-eighths of a farthing to £2 10s. subject to English and Indian income-tax, which the company paid for the share-holders. During the construction of the line the Secretary of State advanced to them interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on their paid-up capital, the advances to be repayable out of the moiety of their surplus profits over 5 per cent. In any half-year when they earned more than £2 10s. per cent. the surplus was to be paid over to the Secretary of State, with the proviso that if a payment was made on account of the earnings of the first half-year any portion of it was to be returned to the company if in the second half-year they did not earn enough to make up the £2 10s. per cent., subject, however, to income-tax. From telegrams received from India within the last few days he could safely tell them that they might look forward to receiving as dividend for the current half-year about £2 7s. per cent. free of income-tax. He feared that they would not get any more than that. Their traffic feared that they would not get any more than that. Their traffic. wer steadily increasing.

INDIA COUNCIL REMITTANCES.—The sales of Government bills during the past week have been remarkably small, not owing to any falling off in the demand, but owing to the refusal of the India Council to sell except at a very high rate. Twenty lacswere offered at the official allotment on Wednesday, but only about 2 lacs were disposed of; these went at 1s. 6 1-16d. both for bills and transfers, with a trifling amount in bills at 1s. 63-32d. per rupee, thus showing an advance of about 1d. on the week. The result of the allotment caused some surprise, and it is believed that the few remittances applied for were for account of some outside operator; at any rate, the exchange banks advanced their buying rates for merchants' bills by d. only, viz, to 1s 5 11-16d. for 30 day bills, and, although exchange advices from India have since improved, the banks do not show any eagerness to buy; indeed, it is a question whether the current quotation could be obtained it is a question whether the current quotation could be obtained for forward business to any considerable extent. Indian bankers expressed themselves very little disconcerted by what appeared to be, in effect, if not actually, a combined action between the buyers of silver and the India Council. Other conditions were certainly not particularly favourable for so strong an advance as that established at the allotment of Council Bills. Not only is the value of money still tending downwards in the East (the Bengal Bank Rate having been reduced from 6 to 5 per cent on Saturday, and the Bombay rate from 5 to 4 per cent. on Wednesday), but some moderately large. Indian Railway Transfers have been offering in the market, and there are more to follow. About 13 lacs, we understand, have been placed at 1s. 6d. per rupce, or one-sixteenth below the minimum demand rate at which the India Council was willing to draw. The amounts disposed of and rates obtained at this week's The amounts disposed of and rates obtained at this week's official allotment of India Council remittances were as follows :-

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

SEVENTEEN LECTURES ON THE STUDY OF MEDLÆVAL AND MODERN HISTORY.*

Statutory lectures on history delivered to undergraduates in an university are more likely to be recondite than interesting, and it is, perhaps, no reflection upon Dr. Stubbs to assert that his work must be judged by the standard of learning rather than of popularity. Indeed, the talented author—one of the most profoundly cultivated intellects of the day—deals largely with the philosophy of history. It is not so much mere facts that he lays before his readers as the deductions to be drawn from the various circumstances to which reference is made. It is true that he introduces himself. "Not as a philosopher, nor as a politician, but as a worker of history." But it may be gathered from the context that in penning these words he used the term "philosopher" in its narrowest sense; and as he avows that he wishes "to educate workers for the good time coming," it is obvious that he aims at something more than a mere rechauffé of facts which "he who runs may read" in the various works which are accessible to the student of history.

"he who runs may read" in the various works which are accessible to the student of history.

A glance at his mode of treating his subject will serve to indicate the tone of the work. Touching upon modern historical inquiry, Dr. Stubbs points out that "compared with the study of ancient history it is like the study of life compared with that of the death, the view of the living body compared with that of the skeleton." With ancient history, facts being complete in themselves, the student can make his own deductions, and promulgate his own theories; there are no disturbing elements to upset calculations or wreck plans of thought; the ocean of inquiry is not dotted with unsuspected and unseen rocks; the expanse is wide, but it is unruffled. As regards modern history, "on the contrary, you are dealing with the living subject; your field of examination is the living, working, thinking, growing world of to-day.

and in this new, and modern, and living world there has been since the era began such a continuity of life and development that hardly one point in its earliest life can be touched without the awakening some chord in the present. Scarcely a single movement now visible in the current of modern affairs but can be traced back with some distinctness to its origin in the early middle ages; scarcely a movement that has disturbed the world since the invasion of our barbarian ancestors but has its representative in the chart of law, or thoughts, or territory to this day. Not a dynasty that is trembling out its little span of days now but represents in its shattered, tottering throne some great hero, some great heroic movement that has won the gratitude of the medieval world. Not a country, revolutionised and levelled until it hardly knew itself, until it scarcely remembered the names of its rivers and mountains, has been able utterly to obliterate the boundaries, or the coustoms, or the affinities of its old divisions. The dynastic traditions of Europe are rooted and grounded in the distant past." This somewhat lengt

THE WIND OF DESTINY.+

Strange and wonderful is the wind of destiny; equally so is the tale which Mr. Hardy has given to the world under the above title. It is unlike any other work with which we are acquainted, so far as the English language is concerned, and we fancy that the author has taken Victor Hugo as his model. There is the same disjointed conversation, which seems to flash forth from the heart rather than the lips; the same reflective fashion of viewing the motives which inspire mankind, and the actions resulting therefrom; the same weird treatment which, were it not masterly, would be revolting. One might well transpose the authors of "Les Travailleurs du Mer" and "The Wind of Destiny," and assign the former to our American friend, and the latter to the democrat across the Channel.

That the writing is powerful is not open to question, that there is considerable ability in the handling of the subject is equally undeniable, and on these grounds the volumes will appeal without doubt to a large number of thoughtful and reflective readers; but as regards novels of the hour by far the greater number of purchasers could not with accuracy be classed in this category. What will the hoi polloi have to say to the "Wind of Destiny"?

We hardly like to venture an opinion. Of love-making there is enough and to spare. So far well; but it is not of the romantic, school-girl fashion, which delights and disgusts. It is rather prosaic and matter-of-fact, the better to stand the "whips and scorns" of time. Then there is the admiration of a wife for one who is not privileged to call himself husband; but passion never emerges into guilt, and there is no thinly-veiled impropriety to give piquancy to the tale, and lend thereto the charm of modern latitude of conduct. Lastly, there are two suicides, both fair daughters of Eve; but there is no sickening detail, and the reader forgets the harassment by reason of the literary veil which envelops what is repulsive, and leaves much to be filled in by imagination. As might have been expected, the plot serves but little more than a peg whereon to hang descriptive word-painting. Each chapter is a scene in itself, and might almost be read apart from the context. There is, doubtless, much to attract in this style of writing, which has, at any rate, the merit that it is much less common than the ordinary everyday novels, which have little in them whereon to reflect. Whatever, therefore, may be the verdict of the public from a publisher's point of view, the "Wind of Destiny" certainly merits perusal as a talented example of a talented school of composition.

RHODES IN ANCIENT TIMES.*

To not a few readers the mention of Rhodes will suggest recollections of childhood connected with the thrilling moment when, opening the volume devoted to the "Seven Wonders of the World," they perused, with open mouth and eyes, the account of the Colossus, to vast in dimensions that it bestrode the mouth of the harbour, into which vessels sailed, passing between its legs—a pure fable, by the way, for, as Mr. Torr shows, its height was little more than 100 feet, while the harbour mouth is of no insignificant width.

But Rhodes deserves to be looked at from other points of view, historical and antiquarian. Like so many of the islands of the Archipelago it owes its origin to volcanic action, having been gradually raised, apparently within recent times, for Mr. Torr reproduces a curious myth on the subject. "When Zeus and the immortals meted out the earth, Rhodes was not yet manifest amidst the sea-waves. Helios (the sun) was away from Olympus, and they left him without portion of land. When he spake thereof, Zeus would cast the lots again; but this he suffered not, for he beheld within the surging sea that land arising from below to be a dwelling-place for men and flocks. Straightway he bade Lachesis proclaim the gods' great oath, and join with Zeus in granting him that isle, when it was born into the upper air, to be his realm."

Situate, like the other islands of the Archipelago, in such a position as to command the commerce between Egypt, the Levant, Asia Minor, and Europe, it rapidly rose into prominence, which was signalised by its being selected by the old geographers (headed by Eratosthenes, B.C. 250) as the point of intersection of the primary meridian with the primary parallel of latitude. So far back as the time of the compilation of Homer's catalogue, the "Rose" of the Egean, as, by a play on its Greek name, the island was called, contributed nine out of the 1,186 ships which formed the Greek Armada against Troy; but in later times its maritime progress was rapid, and in the polmy days of Rhodes it had seventy war vessels, considered even more formidable on account of the brilliant seamaniship and admirable strategy of the crews, than merely for their size. Indeed ten Rhodians were proverbially said to be as good as ten ships, and it is significant of their eminence at sea, that the Rhodian maritime law was adopted as the basis of Roman jurisprudence on matters which, with us, come under "Admiralty" jurisdiction.

the crews, than merely for their size. Indeed ten Rhodians were proverbially said to be as good as ten ships, and it is significant of their eminence at sea, that the Rhodian maritime law was adopted as the basis of Roman jurisprudence on matters which, with us, come under "Admiralty" jurisdiction.

Like our own country, the island was an emporium of merchandise from all parts. Its denizens possessed great commercial aptitude—to this day it is said in the Levant that a Greek of Rhodes will outwit any three Jews in a bargain—and the riches, and consequent splendour and bustle, of the city and port—opes streptiumque—excited general admiration. Strabo, writing about a century B.C., says, "It surpassed all other cities in harbours, in streets, in walls, and in other buildings," while, two centuries later, it was called, "the fairest of Greek cities."

later, it was called, "the fairest of Greek cities."

Shipbuilding was a great industry, Herod of Judea figuring among the distinguished customers. Not that commerce drove away agriculture, for the island was exceptionally fertile; the wine, in particular, "needed no bush" either at Rome or at Athens, though we may doubt whether the "delicate flavour imparted by just the right quantity of sea-water" (p. 70) would quite commend itself to the palate of a modern gourmet.

quite commend itself to the palate of a modern gourmet.

The prosperity of the island—the harbour dues alone were £40,000—showed itself in the luxurious tendencies of its inhabitants, who retained nothing of their Doric origin but a form of its uncouth dialect, so exaggerated that a special lexicon had to be written to interpret it. Their semi-oriental luxury, and the sunny climate, made the fair island a favourite residence of the more wealthy Romans.

Rhodes was celebrated for sculpture and for painting (which latter Anacreon sportively calls the Rhodian art), and the antiquities of the island would have been of the highest interest had more been forthcoming; but many of the finest examples of Rhodian art found their way into the hands of Roman proconsuls, who seem not to have been surpassed by Napoleon himself in rapacity where the fine arts were concerned. Much, however, may doubtless be recovered by systematic exploration, which, if we may judge by some of the illustrations to this work, would be amply rewarded.

Mr. Torr does not bring us beyond the classical period, or we might have had many a stirring tale of the gallant knights of Rhodes, of whom nothing now remains but the immortal fame and the name, Caballero de Rodas, borne by a noble Spanish family descended from one of the band of heroes. But, wherever the author has touched on a subject, he has "bottomed" it. Many of the topics are replete with interest to every classical scholar. For full information on these, we need only refer readers to Mr. Torr's very complete and exhaustive monograph; it abounds in references to his numerous authorities, and will assuredly long remain the standard English work on the Rose of the Egean.

A NORTHERN LILY.*

If "marrying and giving in marriage" be the aim and object of a novel, assuredly Miss Harrison must be congratulated upon the success with which she has mated all the principal characters in her pages. We readily avow that so long as the world remains conducted on its present principles, the goddess of love, or, perhaps, rather the goddess of marriage, will ever be an important factor in the daily life of mankind at large. But is it not a little severe upon the fobles of Eve's daughters to draw a picture of a lady whose sole aim and object in life is to marry her—what? daughters. No, that would be in some degree excusable; but sons—what have they to do with such things? Surely they might be left to their own devices without the assistance of an intriguing mother? But then the authoress may, perhaps, be excused, for with many, indeed, with most of that sex, marriage is the "summum bonum" of existence—till they try it; and then—well, each must speak from personal experience. Nor do we omit to remember that as the great majority of novel readers wear long dresses rather than short coats, naturally Miss Harrison writes for the former rather than the latter. Moreover, if matrimony be a topic which pleases the one, there is a fair sprinkling of death pour encourager the other.

Of the characters sketched interest naturally centres round the "Northern Lily," Miss Elsie Ross—a fine specimen of an openhearted, generous-minded, and—higher than all—absolutely unsophisticated Scotch maiden—who wins the heart of the reader in the first few lines, as she is introduced in company with her rough rugged, and disappointed father, a country laird, who never quite recovered the blow that his only child chanced to be a girl, and not a boy, which latter would have succeeded to the paternal acres. If all specimens of "daughterdom" from the other side of the Tweed were thus lovely and attractive, the "more the merrier" would be the welcome to the Highland and Scotland lassies as they trip towards England's shores and Southern hearths. Then there is "Aunt Caroline," the puritanical and somewhat whimsical wife of old General Lindsay, a couple whom the reader likes because they like Miss Elsie. Their companion, Miss Mayn rrd, if not laughable would be, perhaps, contemptible. Lady Eleanor—stiff, haughty, reserved, and soured—passes along, sometimes despised, at others pitied, her fate being a mixture from the chalice of destiny, in which good and evil are blended in pretty equal quantities. Her sons, David and Lionel, are the heroes of the story, and need therefore no description—they speak for themselves at every turn. The remaining prominent figures—mostly girls—are the ordinary type, of the "earth earthy." They provoke no sympathy, their powers of attraction being superficial—interest in them is but skin deep.

There is considerable conceptive power displayed in the volumes, which have, moreover, one merit—alas! none too common in these days of semi-veiled impropriety—that the pages are not soiled with a single expression calculated to raise a blush upon the cheek of a country maiden, albeit as innocent and simple as the heroine herself, the story of whose uneventful life gives grace and attraction to the tale of a "Northern Lily."

OBITUARY.

THE LATE MR. A. W. FORDE.

Bombay society has lost one of its most esteemed and useful members in Mr. Arthur William Forde, M.LC.E., who died at his bungalow at Maisbar Hill, on Oct. 25th, at the age of sixty-five years. He was a son of the Rev. Arthur Brownlow Forde, of Maghull, Lancashire, and had made a reputation as a civil sengineer before he came out to this country. He was for some years chief engineer of the Londonderry and Inniskillen Railway Company in the north of Ireland, where he passed the greater part of his early life as an engineer. Having been appointed chief engineer of the B.B. and C.I. Railway, he first came out to Bombay in 1855. Mr. Forde constructed the Taptee Bridge, and was the first engineer in this country to employ the Warren girders in bridge construction as he had done in Ireland. Mr. Forde had been wrongly supposed by some to be an advocate of the narrow gauge system. He was in favour of the narrow gauge system only where it would have been too expensive to employ the broad gauge; but he was never an advocate for break of gauge. He was a conscientious worker in his profession, and did most of his work, even as to details, with his own hands. He left the employ of the B.B. and C I. Railway in 1860, being succeeded in the office of chief engineer by Mr. Francis Mathew, and went into private practice up country. In 1864 he settled and practised as an engineer in Bombay with marked ability and success. He began the work undertaken by the Frere Land Reclamation, and was for some years connected with the joint-stock company bearing that name. Mr. Forde also designed and built the Sassoon Dock, the first wet dock in Bombay. He reclaimed a large tract of land near Nowsaree, covering about 7,000 acres, which was named the Sasforde Lund Reclamation, after his family seat in county Down, Ireland. A considerable portion of this land has already been brought into cultivation, and probably needs only further expenditure of capital to make it paywell. In September, 1878, Mr. Forde was appointed consulting engineer to the General Henry Goodwin, of the Royal (late Bengal) Engineers, died on Nov. 8 at Bournemouth, aged seventy-nine. He entered the Bengal Engineers on Dec. 18, 1823, obtained the Colonel's allowance on March 3, 1855, became a full General on July 14, 1871, and was placed on the Retired List under the age clause on Oct. 1, 1877. He served at the siege and capture of Bhurtpore in 1826, and throughout the Punjab campaign of 1848, and was awarded the medal for each of these services. In 1857, he finally left India on account of ill-health, being then Chief Engineer in the Lower Provinces. After his retirement from the service he devoted himself entirely to works of philanthropy in London and elsewhere, and he was one of the originators of the Midnight Mission. The death of General Goodwyn leaves Lord Napier of Magdala the senior of the late Bengal Engineers, while Lieutenant-General F. R. Maunsell, C.B., becomes Colonel-Commandant, and Colonel E. C. S. Williams, C.I.E., obtains the vacant off-reckoning

The late Colonel Alexander MacLeod Stewart, who died at Bell Cottage, Murree, on the 3rd October, was born in December, 1836, and was the only son of Captain Charles Stewart, Royal Artillery, who was killed in the Afghan Campaign of 1842, and graudson of General Sir Alexander MacLeod, K.C.B. He entered the army as an Ensign in the 64th Regiment in 1852, and the Bengal Army in 1853. He served with the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers, and was Adjutant, 4th Punjab Rifles, during the Indian Mutiny in 1857 and 1858; was present at the siege of Delhi, and capture of Lucknow, where he was severely wounded, and was also present at several minor engagements, including the taking of Jhugger and Narmool, at the action of Shamshabad, and at the attack on Fort Royal at which, the commandant being killed, he successfully brought his regiment out of action. He was present at several minor affairs under Lord Clyde until the capture of Bareilly in May, 1858. He was twice honourably mentioned in despatches. He retired from the service in Augus', 1881, on full pay and pension.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1886.

THE SILVER QUESTION AND GOVERNMENT SERVANTS.

THE battle about Currency, Bi-metallism, and fixed ratios continues to rage, and the newspapers received from India by the present Overland Mail are greatly occupied with the long despatch from the Indian to the Home Government containing a statement of the critical financial position in which India is now placed, and suggesting the means of deliverance—the only means which, according to the Indian authorities, can be suggested, viz., Bi-metallism.

On this text each paper preaches its sermon, going over again old arguments, and getting deeper and deeper. into mazy mysteries, "in wild confusion lost." Saint Anthony when he preached to the fishes obtained a very patient and respectful hearing, but when his discourse. was finished it is reported that his congregation continued their old habits, and even the eels "went on eeling." And so it will be with all the currency sermons preached by the Press. Nobody will be convinced by them. whatever side the preachers take. The Currency, Commission will continue to make inquiries, and in the meantime, the rupee may rise or fall. The hope of the Government of India is, of course, that it may rise, but the despair of the servants of the Government of India is that it may fall still further. They are the congregation at present most deeply interested in any discourse which can show them salvation out of their trouble. But to tell them, as one Press preacher does, that nothing can be done in the matter until the Currency Commissioners have examined into the question of whether the fall in silver is or is not a gain to Indian trade is to mock them. Drowning men do not expect onlookers from the shore to discuss the best method of how they may be saved -they simply want to be saved. And this is the position of the servants, civil and military, of the Government of India, who at this moment are suffering from the depreciated currency. It does not matter one jot to them whether the exporter of Indian wheat can to-day buy more wheat for ten rupees than he could do ten years ago for fifteen. They know, and practically have to feel, that fifteen rupees of salary mean to-day a less remuneration than fifteen did ten years ago. Those who have to remit home have to accept a loss by exchange and commission of not less than 25 per cent., and those who, not having given hostages to fortune, are still in happy bachelorhood, find that the purchasing power of the rupee in India has diminished: rather than increased for them, however much it may have enlarged for the wheat or cotton exporter. Rent, wages, and bazaar prices of food have, we are assured, risen everywhere in India against the Sahib -even if they have become lower for those who serve and cheat him. It may be that Ram Bux Khansamah understands how to take advantage of the fall in silver, so as to make his master's rupee go as far in the bazaar as if he were buying wheat for export, but one thing is cera: tain, that his master does not get the benefit of his knowledge. For him cheap silver means dear provisions and an enhancement in the cost of all necessaries of life.

But is there no remedy to be found for this state of things except in the disputations of doctrinaires and currency crazemongers? There is a remedy if the Government will but take courage enough to heart to adopt it, and that remedy is to increase the pay of their servants of the Services who are suffering most severely from the position in which, through no fault of theirs, circumstances have placed them. Permission might be given for family remittances to be sent to England at a certain fixed ratio so as to lessen the present drain on slender resources. Of course the question of where the loss is to fall would immediately be raised by the faddists and the pseudo-economists, and the answer would have to be boldly given that the State must bear the loss. That difficulty would have to be faced, but it is not one that is so very terrible after all. It need not cause any extra burden to English or Indian taxpayer if certain wasteful expenditure in many Departmental directions were checked, and a wise economy substituted. It cannot be argued upon any ground of fiscal, litical, or other policy that the State which contracted to pay its servants a certain remuneration when the rupee represented a certain value (within a fair limit) is justified in taking advantage of an unlooked-for calamity, and should allow its servants to suffer or shift as best they can for themselves. We do not believe that the public, who are the taxpayers, would for a moment complain if the simple action we recommend were taken. If the labourer was worthy of the hire offered to him yesterday, and he continues to do the same good work to-day, it is unjust that he should suffer if his master can prevent it. We have touched upon this subject before, and may have to recur to it again, but, with all respect to all who have written, or are writing, about silver and currency, this is the only solution of the problem, so far as the Indian Services are concerned.

THE STANDARD LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

TO THE EDITOR.

It is satisfactory, so far, that ventilation in your columns of the action of the Standard Company as regards Indian (and Ceylon) policies, has drawn a statement from the Company's Head Office; but the ruling of the Company is, in two ways, open to doubt and objection.

lst. The admission, as it ought to be, that the claims, as they fall in, on the old policies, are to be paid in such currency as may be elected by claimants, is made in the nature of a concession, not, as it undoubtedly should be, as of a right of the assured; moreever it is clogged with conditions which cannot, I conceive, be legally demanded.

I fail to see how

I fail to see how I can be called upon to exercise any present option, or to do anything but to hold the Company to its own bargain made in the most distinct terms in the policy drawn up bargain made in the most distinct terms in the policy drawn up by the Company. However, the Company have perhaps thought better of their idea of calling for my "option," as no demand has as yet been made for my "declaration" of such optional choice.

2nd. What is the meaning of the expression that "Bonuses will, in all cases, follow the currency of the sum assured?" Does it mean, as I will hope that it does, that bonuses will be paid at the rate of 2s. per rupee, in sterling if desired, equally with the sum assured? or that the Company, while giving in to such payment of the sum assured, will withhold it from the bonuses?

I hope not: but would submit the desirability of a perfectly

I hope not; but would submit the desirability of a perfectly clear ruling on this point also.

My bonuses were, prior to 1880, as I have stated in a former letter, certified in s'erling, and, subsequent to that date, have been converted, in the (accumulated) certificates, into rupees, at one rupee for two shillings; and ought evidently to be reconverted into starling at her when they come to be paid to my werted into sterling, at par, when they come to be paid to my heir, or assigns, if so desired, equally with the sum assured. B.

THE STANDARD OFFICE AND ITS POLICY-HOLDERS. The following correspondence appears in the Ceylon Observer:

Colombo, 9th Oct., 1886.

Colombo, 5th Oct., 1800.

(Timeo Danaos dona ferentes.)

Sir,—The letter published last night by the Agents of the Standard Company consists of four paragraphs which I will summarise and comment on, as shortly as possible. In the first they intimate that the Directors supposed that policy-holders were conscious of "the effect the Proclamation of 1872 had on their nolicies:"—that suggested effect being that all policies conpolicies;"-that suggested effect being that all policies contracted for sterling may be discharged by rupees at par of exchange. My short comment on this is that no one but the Directors themselves has ever supposed that the Proclamation had that effect on any policies other than those which had, like had that effect on any policies other than those which had, like Sir Richard Morgan's, combined the two special features of having been contracted prior to 1872, and having reserved power to the Company to discharge them in Ceylon. Other policy-holders are likely to remain "unconscious" of any such effect, and I think that the sooner the Directors awaken to their misconception of the subject the better; lest they find Sir Richard Morgan's case prove a very unprofitable mare's nest for them. Unfortunately, the letter of the Agents does not give much sign of such awakening. of such awakening.

In the same paragraph the Agents disclaim for the Directors any "intention of taking advantage of policy-holders," and all "ungenerous motives." I shall only say that had the rupee been down to 1s. 4d. when Sir Richard Morgan died ungenerous would down to 1s. 4d. when Sir Richard Morgan died ungenerous would have been a mild expression for the conduct of a company (who had then sustained a very slight less by exchange on premia) in taking advantage of that iniquitous proclamation, the effect of which is to reduce a sterling policy by one-third of its sterling value, when the rupee is that late. I do not think the Company acted generously to Sir Richard Morgan's executors, but very much the reverse; and it would probably have done better, in its own interest, to have remembered that non omne qued licet konestum est.*

In the next rangeraph—the important one—the Agents pro-

In the next paragraph—the important one—the Agents claim with a flourish, and as if it were an enormous boon, that those holding policies dated before 1872 and contracted to be paid in nolding policies dated before 18/2 and contracted to be paid in sterling, may now have them endorsed as payable in sterling provided they agree to pay all future premiums in sterling; but, "should they elect to continue paying their premia in rupces at par it would be understood that they admit the Company to be only liable to pay rupees at par of exchange on the falling in of the policies." I am almost tempted—not to overflow with thankfulness for the offer, but—to make the vulgar inquiry with reference to fancied peculiarities in the colour of a querist's organs of vision. If the mental vision of the policy-holders is of the average ence to fancied peculiarities in the colour of a querist's organs of vision. If the mental vision of the policy-holders is of the average acuteness they will probably decline to see the necessity for "endorsing" on their policies that they are payable in sterling, when it has been already provided in the deeds themselves that they are to be so paid! And their lawyers will probably advise them that whether they formally do or do not make the proposed agreement to pay all future premiums in sterling, their policies will nevertheless continue to be due in sterling. Whether the debt by the Company may le subject to a set-off is altogether another question, but whatever is due by it will continue to be due in sterling, with or without any fresh agreement. And no well advised policy-holder will allow it to be understood that they admit the Company to be only liable to pay rupees at par on the falling in of the policies, or, in other words, that they have consented to the tacit alteration of the original contract which is now avowedly suggested to them. On the contrary, and most certainly, unless a sterling policy contains original contract which is now avowedly suggested to them. On the contrary, and most certainly, unless a sterling policy contains an expressly reserved power of payment in Ceylon, or at some defined rate, the policy is at law payable at home in sterling, and payable abroad at the value in sterling of the foreign cur-rency in which it may happen to be paid—be it rupees, dollars, or marks. "Understandings" prove almost invariably to be mis-understandings on one side or the other; and a wise policy-holder or a prudent company will have their "understandings" in writing and signed by both parties in writing and signed by both parties.

The root of the blunder the Company, or their Agents, are committing lies in supposing that "those who have always paid their premiums in rupees at par of exchange" are thus "in terms of the proclamation only entitled to payment of the amount insured in rupees at par of exchange." The Agents in so writing put words and conditions into the proclamation which are not in it. The operation of the proclamation does not in the least depend on either how or where policy-holders have, before or since its date, paid their premia; nor on any circumstances not expressly mentioned in the proclamation itself. In "terms of the proclamation," in a certain limited class of debts, whatever is due in the Colony may be defrayed by rupees at the rate of Rs.10 to £1 sterling; and this is independent of any considerations of any kind whatever. All other classes of debts remain due as they were before the proclamation, and are equally independent of any other considerations whatever than the terms of the contracts. The so called concession, therefore, is no concession at all, and if the policy-holders acquiesce in it they will act fatally to their own interests.

The third paragraph requires no remark. The fourth complains of a want of courtesy in the Committee having addressed the Head Office in London direct instead of through the local Agents. I am sure no discourtesy was intended, and consider the complaint unreasonable, I had almost said querulous as well. Companies and firms at home appoint agents here solely for their own interest and convenience, and their doing so introduces neither law nor etiquette preventing third parties, who are independent of I am quite sure that Sir Hercules Robinson did not foresee (none of us then did) the iniquitous consequences that were to ensue from of us then did) the iniquitous consequences that were to ensue from his rash interference with private contracts, when it became necessary for Revenue purposes to adjust public taxes into rupees at a fixed rate.

both, from addressing the Company or firm direct on matters which can only be disposed of by the principals, and when there is no special convenience to either party in communicating through the agent. The Agents of the Insurance Company are neither agents nor representatives of the policy-holders, nor interested on their behalf. They have neither authority to give the redress that is demanded, nor are they neutral; and it would be mere circumlative. cumlocution to forward through them, instead of through the cumiocution to forward through them, instead of through the Post-office, communications to the Company. But further, the Agents of the Standard Company were invited to attend the meeting of policy-holders and assist their deliberations, but elected to hold themselves apart. They, therefore, cannot reasonably complain that their information as to the resolutions and action of the policy-holders has been only obtained from the public newspapers.—I am, your obedient servant,

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE LATE PUBLIC MEETING OF POLICY-HOLDERS.

ğ II.

Colombo, 13th October, 1886. SIR,—The question at issue between the "Standard" and its SIR,—The question at issue between the "Standard" and its policy-holders has throughout been contained within a very narrow compass, and in my opinion it is now settled by the decision telegraphed by the Directors to the Local Agents. I for one, as the holder of three policies in the Company, have no intention of questioning that decision.

The reciprocal covenants contained in the class of policies affected are plain, and easily understood. The Company undertakes to pay the sum assured in pounds sterling, either in London or Ceylon, provided that the policy-holder on his part pays the premium in pounds sterling in the same way.

For many years some of us have not paid pounds sterling because we have not been asked to do so; now we are; and I cannot see how we can with any show of reason deny our liability.

cannot see how we can with any show of reason deny our liability.

The question whether premiums are too high is another one altogether; some of us can fairly approach the Company upon the subject of excessive rates, but the point has no direct connection with the issue just settled.

My object, however, in addressing you is not so much to express my opinion upon the "Standard" question as to controvert the views of "the Chairman of the meeting of policy-holders" upon what is known as the Currency Proclamation of 1871.

This Proclamation has been called by some very hard names, and it has been suggested that the Chamber of Commerce should take steps to procure its amendment. The plain truth of the matter, however, is that the "iniquitous consequences" that have followed upon this "iniquitous Proclamation" are altogether due to the fact that the judges of our local courts, including the "Chairman of the meeting of policy-holders" himself in his judicial capacity, have interpreted the Proclamation in a sense altogether at variance with its intention and true meaning; and what is wanted to set matters right is not an amending Proclamation, but an authoritative judgment correctly interpreting the existing one.

The Proclamation of 1871 was never intended to have any application whatever to engagements contracted in and payable in British pounds sterling.

It was intended to have reference only to engagements contracted in and payable in rupees though expressed in terms of British money.

And it is owing to judgments having been delivered at variance with this true meaning that the question with the Standard Company and others of a similar nature have arisen.

The currency of Ceylon was never pounds sterling of England as stated by "the Chairman of the meeting of policy-holders." The denomination of accounts was pounds, shillings, and pence, but the actual coin current was before 1872, as it has been ever circumstants.

since the Indian rupee.

It was the custom prior to 1872 to call ten rupees a pound, and sub-divisions of the rupee, shillings and pence, but this did not alter the fact that the actual currency was rupees. It simply meant that we were giving to so many coins an arbitrary name, in the same way that a sovereign and a shilling are now called a guinea. That we chose a very inconvenient name is sufficiently evidenced by what has since occurred.

The object of the Proclamation was a very simple. debar the holder of a bond expressed in terms of British money, but on which only rupees at the rate of ten to the £ were really due from claiming anything else than ten rupees per £ when British money had ; ceased to be the denomination of account in Ceylon. In other words, to put it beyond doubt, that no one could claim what was not his due, i.e., a pound sterling under cover of the fact that Rs. 10 had been described as a pound in

There was never any confusion in the mind of merchants, or probably of the general community, as to the meaning of the Proclamation until the question got into the law courts. To the merchant there was prior to 1872 a difference between a British pound sterling and a Ceylon pound currency, as there is now between a British pound sterling and ten rupees. He always had to adjust the exchange between the courts and the rupees. had to adjust the exchange between the two, as he has now. The only difference is that owing to the change in the relative values, the rate of exchange has materially altered.—I am, sir, your obedient servant, HENRY Bois.

A DICTIONARY OF ISLAM.

Being a Cyclopædia of the Doctrines, Rites, Ceremonies, and Customs, together with the Technical and Theological Terms, of the Muhammadan Religion.

BY

THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D. M.R.A.S.

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary of the Church Missionary Society, Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Mul immadan Religion, and we can only hope that the stalling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary Wo. ld.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr. Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to all those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the literature of the Arabs; and the volume before us, as the work of one man, is a marvel of industry, and fatrly to be characterised as a cyclopedia of the doctrines, rites, coronomies, and customs; together with the technical and theological terms of the Muhammedan religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughos' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. . . . We have read many of its articles with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Mussalman faith, the information being in every cast taken from the most esteemed Muhammadan sources, with the comments of the best European scholars. . This most useful work will be of undoubted value to the student of comparative religion."—Homeward Mail.

Anglo Indians are mentioned.

The object of the above work (originally published in 1875) is to give, in a convenient form, sketches of some of the distinguished men who have materially assisted in building up the fabric of our great Indian Empire. The London Press bestowed a considerable amount of praise on the former little volume, the Standard remarking that it should have been twice the size; while the Friend of India said that "every Anglo-Indian should read" what a London journal styled "a deeply interesting volume."

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatio Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—IVestminster Review.

-NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE. ESTABLISHED 1833.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

'The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette' has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its corre-pondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette "irculates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is surplied direct to the Army and Marino bureaux of the Frensh, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng'and regarding Military affairs.

"VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing Monthly (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and consorvative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Readthg-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and Intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 12th November; from Allahabad and Madras to the 10th November; and from Calcutta to the 9th November

At Lahore, on the 4th inst., Lord Dufferin invested Sir West Ridgeway with the Order of the Star of India.

His Excellency said the moderation and conciliatory spirit shown by the Ameer in regard to the demarcation of the western portion of his frontier ought to facilitate the arrangement of the only remaining matter in dispute in a manuer consonant to his interests and his rights.

THE VICEROV arrived at Ahmedabad on the 5th inst., when he met with a reception of a purely formal character. On the following day his Excellency received an address of welcome from the Municipal Commissioners.

From Ahmedabad the Viceroy went to Baroda. En route he stopped at Neriad, and received an address from the Municipal Commissioners. Referring to the tobacco industry, his Excellency said it was only by general and technical education and by an intelligent and united effort that an honourable place could be maintained in the markets of the world, and that to the truth of this the Gujeratis were fully alive.

Ar Baroda, where elaborate preparations had been made for his reception, the Viceroy opened the new State Hospital, which has been built by the Gaekwar at a cost of two lakhs. The hospital will bear the name of Lady Dufferin, in recognition of her exertions in the cause of the women of India.

THE Viceroy arrived at Bombay on Wednesday, going direct to Sassoon Dock, whence he embarked on board the Clive. After a three days' cruise his Excellency will return to Bombay.

LADY DUFFERIN, who had been detained at Lucknow owing to the illness of Lord Clandeboye, joined the Viceroy at Bombay.

A LARGE number of chiefs and princes are expected in Bombay to meet Lord Dufferin. The Maharajah Holkar of Indore and the Maharajah of Kolhapore have already arrived.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS has arrived at Rangoon, and proceeded to Mandalay.

THE 3rd Hyderabad Cavalry have dispersed a band of dacoits at Shoaybo with a loss of seventeen lives.

THE officers of the Army Headquarters, Madras, have left Rangoon for Madras, and proceed to Ootacamund.

THE office of Minister to the Maharajah Holkar is vacant, Rao Bahadur Nana Moroji having retired from service. The post has been offered to De van Bahadur Raghonath Rao of Midras, who has accepted it, and, if his services can be spared, may be shortly expected back at Indore.

It is asserted that for the present, at any rate, no English tutor will be appointed to take charge of the youthful Scindiah. He will learn the English language from Doctor Crofts, who has just been placed in medical charge of him. The Viceroy agrees with Sir Lepel Griffin, and he, in turn with the late Maharajah, that it is not desirable the son should adopt too many English ways.

Tuz latest news from Cabul is that the Chilzai rising at Chuzni has been completely suppressed.

THE AMEER does not encourage the transmission of letters and papers from one part of his State to another. The postage on an ordinary letter is five annas, and three rupces for a newspaper.

The proximate cause of the Ghilzai rebellion in Afghanislan appears to have been a tax of five rupees a head attempted to be levied on men coming to the railway works in Beluchistan, added to a recent reduction of hereditary stipends paid to the religious classes.

H.E. SIR CHARLES ARBUTHNOT, Commander-in-Chief, has returned to Bombay from Poona.

THE Bank of Bombay on Wednesday reduced its rate of interest on demand loans on Government Paper to 5 percent.

The Hon. J. W. Quinton has returned from Simla to-Allahabad, and resumed charge of his office as Member of the Board of Revenue.

It is probable that Mr. Robert Hardie, Secretary and Treasurer of the Bank of Bengal, may retire in the first half of next year. Mr. Gordon, the Chief Accountant, also intends applying for leave to retire about March next.

THE subscriptions to the Lord U.ick Browne Fund now amount to nearly Rs. 3,000. The Maharani Surnomoyee and his Highress the Nawab of Murshidabad have each contributed Rs. 500.

It is understood that the Hon. H. S. Cunningham will take furlough after the conclusion of his work with the Finance Committee, preparatory to retirement, and that he will not resume his seat on the Calcutta High Court Bench.

MR. CLARMONT DANIEL, Judge of Fategarh, and authoxof several works on the Curroncy Question, has retired from the Punjab Civil Service.

In a Government Gazette Extraordinary the Governor-General in Council places on record his high appreciation of the valuable services rendered by the Alghan Boundary Commission during their two years' absence from British territory.

THE net imports of gold into India in 1885-86 amounted to Rs. 2,76,29,:47, against Rs. 4,67,19,365 in the previous year.

ANOTHER claimant to the Barmese throne has appeared in the person of the Limbin Prince.

THE official report on the tone of the Native Press of Calcutta during the past year is unfavourable. The tone of the Native Press has generally been antagonistic to the legislative and administrative action of the Government.

A VETERINARY Department is about to be established in Berar under Government auspices.

THE disestablishment of the Church in Pondicherry, issto take place immediately.

At a recent meeting of Scotsmen it was decided tohave a St. Andrew's dinner in the Town Hall, Bombay, on the 30th inst.

MAJOR-GENERAL HANCOCK has been selected to take the appointment of Director-General of Railways in India. when it becomes vacant in December.

CHOLERA seems to be epidemic in Calcutta. During the week ending the 30th ult., there were seventy-three deaths from cholera against sixty-three and ninety-eight in the preceding two weeks; the number is higher than the average of the past quinquennium by forty-nine.

The Mandalay Railway has been sold to a private company, who are to take it over when the country is settled.

It is rumoured that the office of the Examiner, Marine Accounts, is to be removed from Calcutta to Bombay.

PRINCE ESTERHAZY, who has been a devoted follower of the chase in India since the Delhi manœuvres, and who still remains in the country to complete his sporting programme, has bagged no fewer than fourteen tigers, two of whom charged simultaneously and were shot right and

Notes of the Week.

THE news that five more regiments are required in Burma is not satisfactory. That Sir Frederick Roberts will succeed in putting down anarchy and dacoity before he leaves may be taken for granted, but how has all this muddle come about? The Indian Press does not hesitate to lay the blame upon the Civil authorities, especially upon Sir C. Bernard, whose intentions were excellent, but who forgot that cheap work is not always the best work. The result of the penny-wise-and-pound-foolish system he at first pursued is now apparent. But the anxious thought is that with the possibility of a rupture any moment with Russia regarding India, England has to keep nearly 40,000 troops in Burma who are utterly unavailable at present for any other work.

THE Rangoon Times says that "there is not the slightest reason to doubt that a very serious difference did exist -between our late Commander-in-Chief and Sir C. Bernard, as to the necessity of proclaiming martial law in our Upper Provinces. It is to be hoped that General Roberts will come to Burma, as we hardly think the Chief Com-missioner can be so self-opinionated as to try and force his absurd ideas upon a man of Sir Frederick's experience."

LORD DUFFERIN, in complimenting the young Nizam of Hyderabad, is reported, according to the Times telegram, to have said that he could imagine no more enviable lot than that of an Indian Prince under British rule, absorbed only in cares concerning his own State, and far removed from the turmoil and trouble of European politics. His Excellency knows how to "take occasion by the hand," and to say graceful things which can be interpreted as the disteners choose. Alexander told Diogenes that he would exchange positions with him if he could, but it is not eynical to think that the philosopher of the tub did not believe him.

A NATIVE ruler, who has really the interests of his people at heart, and who strives to make them prosperous, contented, and therefore happy, has in India a fine field For the exercise of his abilities and honourable ambition, but where is that ruler to be found? He might be created, but not by idle flatteries and tall phrases. Let the Paramount power give all its feudatories to understand that good government—honest and speedy justice—must be the distinguishing marks of their rule, or otherwise they shall not be allowed to govern, and then results would appear which do not now follow on mere Darbár speeches.

WE have commented elsewhere on Lord Dufferin's complaint against the Native Press—an old and very just complaint. There are, however, one or two exceptions from the charge which would include all Native editors and contributors as sedition - mongers. Amongst these Inonourable few we are glad to find a Mahomedan contemporary, the Muslim Herald, which is strong in favour of English rule and leading.

This friendly journal, commenting upon the foolish writings of the class complained of by Lord Dufferin, says:—" If we were to make a gift to a man in need, and with that gift the man goes and drinks and creates a row in the street, would we not naturally decline to oblige him ever again? Similarly, after the disgracoful use a large number of our brethren are making of the liberty of the Press so generously granted to us, can we expect or even dream of yet another gift from England, and that in the form of a representative government? Under present circumstances who could say the renewal of the ugly Gagging Act is not possible; and if Lord Dufferin has really suggested that measure, as once it was rumoured, we cannot justly blame his Excellency." There will be hope of calmer writing and better manners amongst the Bengali Babús, if they will but take a hint from the

THE Assam Government Gazette records as a matter to be thankful for that during the past five years the most remarkable feature of excise demand in Assam has been the growth of the relative importance of country spirits, which is now nearly  $2\frac{1}{2}$  times as much as it was in 1879–80. From an Assam Revenue Collector's point of view this is, perhaps, a consummation to be grateful for, but it is possible that Exeter Hall and the Total Abstaining Associations will not see it in the same happy financial

However, there is a compensating influence in all sublunary trials, and the genial author of the Gazette paragraphs, whilst lamenting that the demand on account of rum had fallen off in the two upper districts of the Assam Valley, and that the consumption in the four lower ones was "inconsiderable," gives the gratifying (to the Board of Revenue) information that "an exception is found, however, in Goálpára and the Gáro hills, where the cheapness of Bengal rum enables it to hold its own against the increasing consumption of country spirits.'

A succession whence he visited the caves of Ellora. He then went on to Hyderabad, arriving there on Wednesday evening. A succession of fetes occupied the remainder of the week, the principal being a banquet|given by the Nizam on Thursday. On that occasion Lord Dufferin, in proposing the health of the Nizam, described him as the representative of a dynasty and a State which had always been faithful allies and friends of the British Crown. His Highness was, the Viceroy proceeded, a young man standing on the threshold of what he hoped would prove a happy and fortunate career. Indeed, he knew no more enviable position than that of the Princes of India. Enjoying as they did under the British Imperium absolute immunity from those anxieties by which European States were perpetually exercised—namely, dangers from without and the fear of revolution within—they were able to give their whole time and attention to the advancement of their States, a field amply sufficient to satisfy the widest ambition. They also had the satisfaction of knowing that the British Government desired to extend to them its heartiest sympathy and assistance, asking nothing in return but that they should administer wisely. He was happy to assure the Nizam that there was no community of India in whose happiness and prosperity the Queen and people of England and the Indian Government took a deeper interest than they felt in the great historical State of Hyderabad.

The recent religious riots at Delhi appear to have left a considerable feeling of bitterness behind. The Hindoo cloth merchants of that city have united to refuse to sell to or hold any dealings with the Mahomedans, and the symptoms of boycotting and conspiracy are spreading to other trades. A petition praying for his interference has been presented by a large number of influential Mahomedans to the Deputy Commissioner. It is feared that if something be not done there will be a serious interruption of the trade of Delhi, and possibly a renewal of the riots.

The announcement that the Government has lent a large sum of money to the Simla Municipality for the purpose of building a town hall has excited much surprise. The step is severely criticised by the majority of the Indian Press. Some newspapers, however, defend it as a legitimate investment of capital. This defence can hardly be supported in face of the fact that the Government lately refused loans for important public works in Calcutta and Bombay. The security, too, is more than doubtful, seeing that the prosperity, if not the very existence, of Simla rests upon a very uncervain tenure.

The Australian steamer Melpomene, with 582 Mahomedan pilgrims, returning from Mecca, arrived at Cilcutta on Friday. When passing Madras she was caught in a cyclone, and driven for about two days. Twenty-three Native passengers died of fright or of injuries received from the violent rolling. The captain and several of the crew were also severely injured.

CALCUTTA, Nov. 28.

A Rangoon correspondent telegraphs that five more Native infantry regiments are expected immediately—namely, three from Madras, one from Bombay, and one from Calcutta. Four go by the main river and the fifth to Ningyan.

Major Symonds, of the South Wales Borderers, commanding the mounted infantry, has captured the camp, arms, and transport of Hlaco, the dacoit leader in the Tsagain district, who, hearing of the British approach, narrowly escaped through the dense jungle, leaving many of his men as prisoners. The telegraph from Mandalay is monopolised by State messages, and all private messages are refused. messages are refused.

RANGOON, Nov 28. Fifty men of the Rifle Brigade, twenty-five Midras Lancers, and fifty mounted infantrymen met on Monday a large body of Boshway's force between Minhla and Tsagain. The enemy was entirely routed. One hundred and forty-three rebels were killed. On attempting to cross the Irrawaddy they were turned back by the launches of the Naval Brigade. Lieutenant Jones, of the Rifle Brigade, and two men were wounded. Boshway's force still numbers some 3,000 men.

The rebels in question are said to belong to Bo Shwebo's force; and if so, the attempt proves him to be even more powerful and enterprising than was supposed, for, by last accounts, he had fallen back towards Napeb, and in any case Myingyan lies far outside his ordinary beat. The Shans are coming in to Myingyan with offers of co-operation to clear the country of dacoits, whose ascendency they find to be destroying their trade.

A NATIVE PAPER ON BRITISH RULE. (Englishman.)

That somewhat notorious vernacular print, the Ananda Bazar Patrika, draws a very sombre picture of the economical state of Bihar under British rule, and compares its present wretched condition with its prosperity, not merely under the Hindu Rajah of old, whose virtues and good fortune seem to have rivalled those of old, whose virtues and good fortune seem to have rivating those of the early Kings of Ireland, but even under the sway of the Mussalmans. The writer is "unable to restrain his tears at be-holding the wasted bodies, the tattered clothing, the wretched huts of a peasantry, which it is difficult to believe was once one of the most prosperous in the world." Nor, apparently, is the Bengali rayat a much more pleasing subject of contemplation. The skies have relented, and have given him good harvests of late, but he is always trembling on the brink of famine, and nothing but his abstemious habits and low scale of living prevent him from being a perennial insolvent. Of course there is some nim from being a perennial insolvent. Of course there is some truth in this picture, and English writers are not less ready than Bengalis to a limit that the people of India, even for an Oriental race, are not wealthy. But it is useless to imply that the only remedy for this discouraging state of things is the removal of British rule. No other remedy is suggested by our Native critic—and the fact that poverty and distress have occurred under British rule is emphasical with an obviously hostile intention.

Now the Angula Ragar Patrila can hardly hope to make British rule is emphasi-ed with an obviously hostile intention.

Now, the Ananda Bazar Patrika can hardly hope to make political capital out of such insinuations against British rule. When a Radical on the stump declares that Lord Salisbury is responsible for the failure of the crops and the high price of foodstuffs we make allowances for party acrimony, and understand him to mean that he desires to secure the return of Mr. Gladstone to power by any means and all means. But there is no very immediate prospect of the Editor of the Ananda Bazar Patrika becoming Lieutenant-Governor, or even Commissioner, of Patrika and it seems a pick that he should stir up race animosity without and it seems a pity that he should stir up race animosity without and it seems a pity that he should stir up race animosity without any object other than mere mischief-making. Such petulant recrimination is the more to be regretted that Native newspapers can do much, if they will, to ameliorate the condition of the more crowded parts of Bihar and Bengal. Why do they not teach their readers that only four or five days journey from the pullulating villages of Bihar lie thousands of acres of rich soil waiting to be reclaimed from jungle? It is the fashion nowadays for Native journals to abuse teaplanters and the labour laws; for Native journa's to abuse teaplanters and the labour laws; and to charge Europeans in Assam with crimes which recall the vigorous denunciations of the "Nildarpan." But the tea planters, whatever their errors (and they are not those which the Calcutta babus are wont to heap on their shoulders), have a defence before humanity which was denied to the indigo-planters of Lower Bengal. They have been the pioneers of migration into Eastern Bengal. In eight years the teapla ters of Assam have drained away from the most crowded and poverty-stricken parts of Bengal no less than 180,000 men, women, and children. Why is this work of migration left entirely to the much-abused teaplanter? He is no mere philanthropist, and the life of a tea-garden coolie is not one which a prosperous rayat would choose. But it is evidently better than the existence of thousands of small cultivators in Biber and Cnota Nagpur. Else how is it that from 2,000 to 3,000 garden sirdars leave Assam every year, and return to the tea-gardens with fresh recruits for the labour force?

GLORY OR SHAME. (Madras Times.)

The marvellous elasticity of the Indian Revenue was proclaimed with a grand flourish of trumpets in the year following the official close of the last great famine. We say advisedly the official close, for it is a well-known fact that the people were still suffering from the miseries of privation, when the Government officials in the Revenue Department began rigorously to collect, not merely revenue for the current year, but arrears and advances. How thoroughly this was done, and what widespread and profound misery and ruin were inflicted in the collecting of the revenue in the Salem district at that time, was clearly and honestly depicted with mingled sorrow and indignation by Mr. Stokes. In the same remorseless way, perhaps in some places with greater ruthlessness, the revenue was collected all over the country in that year and the following, with the astounding result that it was the largest revenue ever collected in India—the totals seeming to astonish even the Government, whose urgent demands for money had caused the putting forth of extraordinary and cruel efforts by the revenue officers. At once to express the magnitude of the result, and to conceal the enormity of the cruelty by which it was attained, the word "elastic" was applied to the revenues of India.

The simple, innocent Government of Lord Lytton could not, of course, be expected to know how so much money was raised immediately after the most grievous of known famines. It is true that he could, and did, quote Micawber on balancing income and expenditure. But he who could not tell how the money went in the Delhi Assemblage and the Afghan campaigns, could hardly be expected to care how the money came, provided it did come. Is not vegetable life so vigorous in the tropics that the lamboo shoots up a cubit in a night? Did not Jonah's gourd spring up in a night? Why should it be different with the revenue of India? Or it Lord Lytton might say in the same strain as Topsy said of herself. "I 'spects it grow'd." Blissful ignorance!

Is not vegetable life so vigorous in the tropics that the lamboo shoots up a cubit in a night? Did not Jonah's gourd spring up in a night? Why should it be different with the revenue of India? Of it Lord Lytton might say in the same strain as Topsy said of herself, "I 'spects it grow'd." Blissful ignorance!

But his Excellency, Sir Mountstuart Elphinstone Grant Duff, K.C.S.I., Governor of the Presidency of Fort St. George, is a different kind of man altogether from Lord Lytton. Though he can quote poetry, we question whether he ever gave his mind to writing it. Doubtless he could do it, if he tried, for what is there he cannot do? And his universal knowledge would be of great he cannot do? And his universal knowledge would be of great use in such composition, if he but indulged in the poetic vein, and acquired skill in versification. But we suspect his Excellency regards life as far too serious for any portion of it to be spent in such vanities. And as to his confessing ignorance of the way in which money either comes or goes, he would be ashamed to do it, and it would not be necessary. For none knows more of these or any other matters than this omniscient statesman. In his Review Minute he observes without approbation that a certain school consider the revenue of this country as "wholly inelastic." In the face of that statement, and of the fact that, when he began his rule, the customs duties had been swept away, and the sult tax reduced by twenty per cent., his Excellency thinks it not a bad result that the income of the Presidency rose from £9,530,000 in 1881-82 to £9,960,000 in 1885-86, and that the increase under purely revenue heads was even greater than the total would lead one to expect. Exultingly he announces the fact that the increase of net revenue divided between the Imperial and Provincial of net revenue divided between the Imperial and Provincial Governments in four years amounted to nearly 100 lakhs, or 25 lakhs a year. But the expenditure also of the Madras Presidency has increased enormously—to more than 150 lakhs over the expenditure in the year before the famine. Indeed, the revenue in 1883-84 exceeded the revenue in the infamous year after the famine, and fell short only by nearly 18 lakhs of the revenue in the more n-torious year following. The gross increase of revenue in four years, compared with the revenue of the year before the famine is no less than 165 lakhs or 41 lakhs a year! Whether famine, is no less than 165 lakhs, or 41 lakhs a year! Whether this should be a matter of congratulation or not depends a great deal on circumstances. The enormous increase in the revenue immediately after the famine was regarded by the rulers of the land with great complacency. But considering the means employed to bring about that increase and the disastrous effect upon the country of employing such means, that increase ought to be rather matter for shame and regret. If we could be sure that the increase in the revenue under the present Governor arose naturally out of the increasing prosperity of the country, then ought we to rejuice. But if the revenue has been increasing while the country has been stationary or deliving in prosperity we think it should has been stationary or declining in prosperity, we think it should be a matter for shame and legret rather than for rejoicing. A very large portion of the 100 lakes of net increase of revenue was very large portion of the 100 lakes of net increase of revenue was derived from the collection of arrears of land revenue. Says his Excellency the Governor: "Even before the famine the arrears of land revenue were much too high—over 62 lakes." It is evident that after the famine, and when the present rule began, the arrears were very much greater, and yet this large amount of arrears, due by people still suffering from the effects of famine, has been reduced till it is now less than 22 lakes. Did the people pay up their debts out of the abundant increase of their property and their debts out of the abundant increase of their prosperity and of the fruit of the land? Indeed, it is not only the arrears that they have been paying up, but an increased proportion of the annual demand, and there are clear indications of coercion and of diminishing prosperity, with this great increase in the land revenue.

UNEQUAL EMOLUMENTS. (Bengal Times.)

Unquestionably, it seems fair to advocate, upon broad principles of equity that, where duties are supposed to be similarly responsible demand equal intelligence, moral integrity, appreciation of strict justice and self-abnegation in promoting the public interests, two men discharging such functions should be paid alike. At a casual glance, one seems to be struck with the extreme impartiality of such a principle, and but for certain internal differences in the habits, mental, constitutional, ethical and assisted fibre of those two men, candour would compel from us an acknowledgment that, any difference between them in emolument, ran's, or other essential, could only stand confessed as stigma and a scandal on a Government that would tolerate it. Closer inspection and a wider range of experience, combined with a healthier and more liberal view of human infirmity, have changed our ideas in such respects, just as we feel sure we shall succeed in changing our realers by showing how men's work may differ who strive for similar results, and with not altogether dissimilar powers. Let us start with an illustration of a European and a Native, as Deputy-Magistrate. Can it be supposed that and a Native, as Deputy-Magistrate. Can it be supposed that these two incumbents—attainments being fairly equal—would, in all respects, turn out work of precisely similar value? It seems to us rash to arrive at any such conclusion. Allowing both Native and European a full share of integrity of purpose and honesty of principly, can we deliberately determine that unfilled integrated on the same lines? that undiluted justice would be administered on the same lines? We doubt it. If we take into account the surroundings of both, their peculiar habits, idiosyncracies, frame of mind and liability to local influences, it is impossible to believe that both will regard innocence or guilt in an accused person from a similar standpoint. Bazar gup, that prolific source of distortion and embellishment, is always more or less busy with peoples' names and reputations in a Motussil station, where intelligent communities are limited, while small beer and its chronicles are not. Europeans seldom or while small beer and its chronicles are not. Europeans seldom or never hear what is said in bizars, but to a Native, gossip and report are part and form a very essential part of his mental pabulum. Hence it is that a Native Magistrate is often as well versed in the history of a case he is about to try, as Muktears on both sides. This we know from personal observation extending over a long range of years. That being so, who will contend for one instant that, one's mind is not more or less hisseed for or against an accused before a tittle more or less biassed, for or against an accused, before a tittle of evidence has been recorded? This is no fable, since we have seen it illustrated in a variety of examples. In ninety have seen it illustrated in a variety of examples. In ninety per cent. of cases decided by Europeans, no whisper has reached a presiding officer of a single detail he has to analyse. It is e.sy takes in hand a case with a preconception of its merits, imperfectly gathered from report; and argue as one may, it is simply impossible to divest one's mind of associations with which current rumour surrounds delinquencies. It follows, therefore, if current rumour surrounds delinquencies. It follows, therefore, it our proposition be true, that the quality of work performed by these two officers must differ in its intrinsic value, and this view is strengthened by a tendency in Native litigants to refer their cases to the judical arbitration of European officers in preference to that of their own countrymen. Now, if work is unequally done, payment for it should undeniably be adjusted upon some equitable scale of proportionate value. Hence, reason and justice alike declare in favour of higher emoluments for Europeans. Were it even otherwise, there are arguments in favour of Were it even otherwise, there are arguments in favour of our contention which we may not overlook. Apart from all we have previously advanced, it must be evident that domestic outlay in European families is very much larger than it need be among Natives. A European, accustomed to and reared upon a generous, stimulating diet, disburses, as a necessity, much more upon his food than would suffice for a Native, and this rule applies equally to his apparel, his establishment and his surroundings. To maintain his prestige, he is forced by necessity to live up to a certain figure, both in and out of his dwelling. His table and other appointments must correspond with his social status. Then, too, we must take into account that, there are not many Europeans in India whose income is unaffected by current rates of exchange on home remittances. Twenty-five per cent. and upwards of loss upon every pound sterling, or its equivalent, is a tax that implies a strain few incomes can sustain, except under a tax that implies a strain few incomes can sustain, except under the contraction of the property of of th system of pinching economy in other directions, involving a self-denial and personal sacrifice not easily estimated. It is doubtless for these and other sufficient reasons Government has wisely made a distinction that equity will approve. Once, this principle is accepted, and acted upon, in its implicit integrity, Natives will be convinced that no disparagement of their abilities is implied, and this true, once thoroughly digested, we shall see less of that sullen discontent which has of late years characterised Native

RACE FEELING. (Indian Chronicle).

What do the otherwise well-meaning Hindoo residents of Allahabad mean by starting a Samaj for the guidance of Hindoos in their intercourse with the Mahomedans? If there be any in their intercourse with the Mahomedans? If there be any truth in the paragraph that is now going the round of the Indian papers, we cannot but condemn the folly of these who have had any hand in starting such an Association. It is said that a separate market has been opened in order to cut off all communication with the Mahomedans, and that a resolution has been passed at a general meeting requiring all Hiudoos not to use an ekka or carriage driven by a Mahomedan, nor to buy any article from a Mahomedan. It is also resolved that no Hindoo should ever evoke the medical help of a Mahomedan dector or Hakeem, and that every Mahomedan. It is also resolved that no Hindoo should ever evoke the medical help of a Mahomedan dector or Hakeem, and that every Hindoo should shun the atmosphere of a Mussulman lawyer or Mukhtear. The members of the Association are said to be "leading gentlemen," but if this be the outcome of their lead the sooner such leaders are discarded the better for all concerned. sooner such leaders are discarded the better for all concerned. The relation between the two races has become bad enough in all conscience; why embitter it more by the display of such foolish and scandalous exclusiveness? If you have any pretension to culture and good sense, why should there be such an exhibition of silly prejudices? We must also ask all good Mahomedans to learn forbearance and teach the masses of their community to cultivate good fellowship and peacefulness. It is the fanaticism and violent conduct of the lower c'asses of that race that exasparate the otherwise peaceloving Hindocs. We must also canperate the otherwise peare-loving Hindocs. We must also candidly request the leaders of the Mahomedan community not to play into the hands of the Anglo Indians and sacrifice national interests for the sake of temporary and petty individual or sectional advantages. Rightly or wrongly, a feeling is gaining ground that any Mahamedan follows whiteses are set up by the Anglo that our Mahomedan fellow-subjects are set up by the Anglo-Indians to put down the Hindoo community that is now showing a tendency to claim political power and privileges. There can be no real progress without peace and harmony between the two communities. Secret or open rupture between them cannot benefit anyone but the Anglo-Indians. The leaders of both the races must understand this, and act accordingly. The two races must unite, notwithstanding the fanaticism of the one or the prejudices of the other. They must come together in spite of the Anglo-Indian intrigue.

ORIENTAL EDUCATION IN THE PUNJAB. (Bombay Gazette.)

The nomination of Sir Lepel Griffin to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab has raised in the minds of many of his old friends in the Land of the Five Rivers the expectation that the educational policy of the province, of which we have heard a good deal for some time past, will not always continue to be precisely what it is now. Sir Lepel, it is true, may think it his duty to accept things as they stand, and may prefer not to disturb arrangements against which at one time he thought it equally his duty to raise an emphatic and a very practical protest. Kings do not always carry out, when they come to the throne, the prodo not always carry out, when they come to the throne, the professions which they have made when heirs apparent. It has, nevertheless, already been thought while in the Punjab to recall the fact that not much more than a year ago Sir Lepel Griffin, to show his dissatisfaction with the policy of disorientalising the Punjab University, resigned his fellowship, and that in stating his reason for doing so he pretty plainly gave it as his belief that money that had been given for the promotion of Oriental learning had been expended for quite other purposes. The friends of Oriental learning in the Punjab must take account of the obligations of that principle of a timustrative continuity which binds tions of that principle of a ministrative continuity which binds even Liberal Governments to accept the acts and legislation of their Conservative producessers. But we must not wonder if they treat the return of Sir Lepel Griffin to the Province as an including the continuity which binds are the return of the province as a manufacture of the province as a manuf treat the return of Sir Lepel Griffin to the Province as an encouragement to reop in the question which Sir Charles Aitchison and his Government endeavoured to close by a series of resolutions last April, which we reviewed at the time. That the belief in a wrong expenditure of the funds contributed to the University prevails in the Punjab cannot be doubted, and we are not aware that it has been in any way weakened by Sir Charles Aitchison's resolutions, carefully and judicially though they were drawn up, and emphatic though they were in expressing the belief that instead of English learning having been favoured at the expense of Oriental, it is Oriental learning that has been favoured at the expense of English. We are almost afraid to say how at the expense of English. We are almost afraid to say how many lakes the protesting party say have been lost to the University Treasury by this reputed departure from its original aim. But there is undoubted warrant for the belief that the purse-strings of princely liberality have been tightened since what they has got abroad that the former donors are not getting what they subscribed for. The Punjab Government may have made out a good case against Dr. Leitner, the Anjumani Punjab, and the contributing chiefs. But they have failed in the most important part of the task they took in hand, inasmuch as they have not satisfied the people whose criticisms had provoked them to take pen in hand. Nor will these people be consiliated by the treat pen in hand. Nor will these people be conciliated by the treatment that Dr. Leitner, the persevering if somewhat too persistent champion of Oriental learning, seems likely to get at the hands of the Iudia Office. Dr. Leitner's controversy with the Punjab-Government, or rather with the Education Department of the Province has not been in all respects a pleasant episode: but he Government, or rather with the Education Department of the Province, has not been in all respects a pleasant episode; but has fought honourably enough for a principle which he believes to be sound, and which was certainly in greater favour at Labore at the time the University was founded than his opponents are willing to admit. But he has done distinguished service to India and to Oriental learning, service which the Punjab Government itself have thought would only be adequately recognised by bestowing upon him on his retirement in ill-health, after twentytwo years' work, a pension of £750 per annum. In lieu of this the Secretary of State proposes to give the very different pension of five thousand rupees per annum. So far as this may be a personal injustice Dr. Leitner must be left to fight it out with the India Office, with such help as the Punjab Government may be india Office, with such help as the Punjab Government may be disposed to give him. We are concerned with it only on the publication of that a conspicuously meagre recognition of the work that Dr. Leitner has done in India will be interpreted as a new indication of hostility to the principle which he has endcavoured to give effect to during his career in this country—the principles that money given for the promotion of Oriental learning thoughs the medium of the vernacular Learning to be jabously. restricted to that purpose.

INVITING DISASTER FOR MADRAS AND THE EMPIRE. (Madras Mail.)

It will hardly be credited by the public of Midra, but it is a fact, that the Local Government has received a telegram from the fact, that the Local Government has received a telegram from the Government of India directing that the gunpowder factory in this town is to be closed immediately. The factory supplies the whole of the powder requirements of the Presidency of Madrasand the Province of Burms, and has on several occasions largely supplemented the supplies of the Bengal and Bombay factories for the use of the army in Northern India. The Government of India has assured itself that a "saving"—so called—of Rs. 42,0000 per annum will result from discontinuing the local manufacture of powder and turning adrift the skilled labour now employed in of powder, and turning adrift the skilled labour now employed in-the factory. It has convinced itself that the future requirementsof the presidency will be met without difficulty by the Bengal. and Bombay factories, with the aid of railways and steamers. It "makes believe" that there will be no danger of the presidency being left all ogether without powder at some grave crisis in the history of the Empire. The Madras Government has steadily resisted the carrying out of this short-sighted "economy," and: the Chamber of Commerce and Trades A sociation have striven toshow that the factory is absolutely essential in this land of great distances to the safety of the Presidency. But the expected saving has blinded the Government of India to all common sense. views, and stopped its ears to a'l prudent arguments. wisdom" with which the world is governed is likely, therefore, to receive a remarkable illustration in Madras. Bengal wants money and Madras wants safety; but the weaker ever goes to the wall; and the safety of Madras is to be compromised or sacrificed for a paltry financial consideration. It would be better in every way to get the money by disporsing with a member of council, or some other luxury; but Her Majesty's Government and Parliament would have a word to say about that; whereas it is within the power of the Government of India to efface the factory by a stroke of its pen. Who knows what a day may bring forth in the world of politics? England may be at war with Russia, or France, or both, in a month or two, and the eneny would, if well advised and well informed, go promptly for the vulnerable points of the British Empire. Such a point would be found in Madras. This is not a time for disarming, but for arming; it is not a time for diminishing, but for developing our military resources; it is not a time for inviting, but for providing against attack. "But money we must have," says the Government of India, "and if a risk is run by our way of getting money, why—we'll risk it." The well-equipped cruiser that anchors off Madras some fine day—when the two powder factories in the north are proving incapable of meeting the demands from the frontier, much less of attending to urgent indents from Madras—may, with comparative ease, exact an indemnity of a million sterling from such a town, as the alternative to bombardment, on the most approved principles. The Rs. 42,000 wise, and million-and prestige foolish policy towards Madras of Lord Dufferiz's Government will then—but too late!—be seen and known of all men. Despite the "harsh'and boisterous tongue of war" that we all hear, the Government of India is deliberately sinning against light and knowledge; and, unless the Secretary of State intervenes, Madras may, at an early date, find herself without the first means of self-defence.

THE DRINKING HABITS OF THE NATIVES OF INDIA. (Madras Times.)

In a pamphlet lately published, a member of the Bitish and Colonial Temperance Congress—Mr. J. Gelson Gregson—has declared he discovered in this country a new sphere whence to obtain converts to total abstinence. Natives of India may, or may not, be surprised to hear, however, that he has directed attention not to the "peg"-drinkers amongst his countrymen, but to themselves. At the same time, if they feel hurt at the supposition that the active propagation of the principles of total abstinence in their midst is necessary, they will experience some relief on finding that, if it be true they have, as a body, given way to habits of drinking of late years, they are not blameless, as the onus rests with the British Government. According to Mr. Grogson, the dissolute British having found a people who never did anything wicked, wilfully scattered education amongst them broadcast. We have never heard a Native of India express any other feeling than considerable satisfaction on all counts, yet, according to this authority, "it is sad beyond expression to find that the civilising, and educational, and even religious surround ings of educated Natives have been ruined and corrupted by the drinking habits of their teachers." In support of this idea, the author quotes a medical officer who states bluntly that the "demoralising habit of private drinking has been the effect of education." Now we cannot see, in the first place, that the average European of the present day is so remarkably addicted to "peg drinking" as to constitute a danger to the more virtuou ly disposed Native; still less can we admit that Europeans with whom Natives may be brought in contact whilst acquiring an education, are so. Further, it is difficult to conceive that education per se could be productive of harm, as it is not usual to find the British philosopher overcome by scientific discoveries at the bottom of a recently emptied goblet.

That all Europeans ao not see that in partaking daily of a certain amount of alcohol, they commit a more reprohensible act than in assimilating a definite proportion of wheaten bread, may seem to the hysterically constituted mind of Mr. Gregson, "prodigious;" and filled with the horror of this crime, it has not been difficult for him to imagine the rest of his arguments. It would certainly seem likely that something more than the gaining of a good education was to make even the susceptible Native—of Mr. Gregson's imagination—become a drunkard. Possibly, he has felt that some little a idition to his bare theory was desirable, as the quotes as another factor the increased social intercourse which takes place in the present day between Europeans and Natives of the upper classe. The author's audience at Piccadilly must, when this new view was introduced, have depicted to themselves the heaven born Civilians, and the military élite of this country, involved in nightly or lies with the "nabob" of their childhood's fancies, and have heartily despised their dissipated countrymen, who thus seduce from the path of virtue their innocent Aryan brethren. Yet, those who are in a position to know what the real nature of such intercourse is, will not readily agree with Mr. Gregson that it is with any class of Native sufficiently intimate, to form a factor of the slightest import: even granting—which we do not—that association with a European tends to degrade morality.

Such, then, are his views as to the causes of intemperance in the upper classes; but, as neither education nor social intercourse can be said to exist to any alarming extent a nonget the lower orders, on their behalf Mr. Gregson assumes that the malignant intentions of the Britis. Government have been displayed by the establishment of shops for the sale of alcoholic liquors. certainly atrocious conduct. But, according to the author, the "simple-minded Natives" heap coals of fire upon the heads of their rulers by imbibing assiduously, so as "to confer a favour upon Government by drinking their taxed liquors.' This is about the most disinterested piece of kindness that we have heard of for a long time; and in the face of the statement it would be difficult to repress feelings of sympathy with an oppressed people deliberately sacrificing themselves, body and soul, for the support of their avaricious rulers. To the uninitiated Anglo-Indian the idea that Government encourages the opening of liquor-shops must come as news. It is very possible that the money gathered under the Abkari system is welcome in a treasury whither none too much coin arrives; but it is not clear that the indirectly placing of a heavy tax on any article of diet or luxury is the best method of favouring its popular use. As a matter of fact, the action of Government simply places under control the pro-duction of alcoholic liquors, without which Government would be heavy losers monetarily, and the people would not "confer a favour" upon the Sircar, but of their own accord would drink double and treble the amount they do at present. In Madras, according to Sir M. E. Grant Duff, the Government has "tried, and with considerable success, to raise the price of spirits and to suppress illicit practices." In the year 1881-2 the Abkari revenue was 60 lakhs; in 1885-6 it will probably reach 81 lakhs. But "we do not auticipate an increase of intemperance." The consumption of spirits has recently fallen off by 9\frac{1}{2} per cent, not-withstanding the increasing prosperity of the people. "Certain classes of the people will drink alcoholic liquor. The only ques-tion is whether they are to be supplied under a system which left enormous profits to the trade, or under a system which intercepts

On the whole, we think that most educated Natives will pray to be delivered from apologists of Mr. Gregson's type. They are not "simple-minded," nor are they children. Education must have shown them that each member of a community is responsible, in the first place, to himself for his own moral actions. least, it would be rather perplexing, in a court of justice, for the plea to be advanced that a criminal, having had the mistortune to obtain in his youth a good education, could not be proceeded against. There are other modes of regarding the matter. India was doomed to be in the position of China as to the development of her foreign trade, those in a social position to afford imported luxuries would, as a matter of course, be sure to indulge in them—strange drinks among the rest—whether the Europe in invader does or does not exhibit the best mode of preparing iced "peg." As to the poorer classes, the fact that they to day a n-sume more of the drink they fancied centuries before a European possessed a rood of the country, simply shows that they are better off financially than they were formerly. In the "good old days" much of the labour obtained by the rulers of the country was forced, and remuneration took the shape of an issue of grain, and an occasional encouragement in the way of a bit of cloth. Accordingly the coolie of the period had very little cash with which to indulge in purchased liquor. But that the desire to possess about the only luxury his soul pines for was as strong then as it is now, it is impossible to doubt. With all due deference to the author's opinion, we think that the best mode of checking the drinking habits of the lower stratum of Natives is to diffuse education—the supposed exciting cause in the case of the upper—amongst them. No one who has watched the steady decline of drinking habits amongst the upper and lower classes of Englishmen in the latter half of the nineteenth century can fail to have perceived that it has been synchronous with the various measures that have been brought about that healthier tone of public opinion, which dictates the wisdom of exercising "moderation in all things.

MAKING UP FOR LOST TIME. (Delhi Gazette.)

A glance at the itinerary list which is being arranged for the Viceroy proves this fact, that a change to a hill climate acts beneficially on the members of Government in setting them up to undertake arduous and uninterrupted efforts during the winter season. We doubt very much whether a residence at Calcutt during the hot months would leave the Viceroy as willing to carry out such a programme as the one now being prepared for him, and therefore for this, if for no other reason, we join issue with those who will insist on writing against a retreat to some temperate region during the hot months of the year. Now and again Hill correspondents furnish the dailies with graphic accounts of holiday-making in the higher regions, and the conclusion is drawn immediately that life in those regions is all a picnic. This is not true. There is much hard work to be done at Simla and other places, and the folks who are privileged to retire to them are not exempted from the care and toil of office work. Loking at the programme of work to be done, one cannot help feeling, that even if a period of rest is enjoyed during the intolerable heat of summer, there is some compensation for such laxity in the high pressure arrangements for winter. So we do not grumble with those who drew up the plan, because they have included a visit to the celebrated caves of Ajunta and Ellora. Such a break on the strain and the worry of the winter engagements will be very acceptable. We have no doubt that the places to be visited and the acts to be performed will all the better be undertaken for a pleasant little outing coming between.

Perhaps the most important item on the list is the contemplated visit of Lord Dufferin to the Dominions of the Nizam, where the presence of the highest authority in the land would seem to be necessary in order to restore peace and harmony. No one can undervalue the importance of this duty when they realise the position occupied by the southern ruler, and the necessity for the bringing about of a better state of feeling between those who are in authority. Hyderabad has always been reckoned an independent state, and there are some Native writers who think that the Government have no right of interference at all in its internal management. This principle has been carried out to some extent by the Indian Government, who have carefully avoided any reversal of those conditions which were granted to the Nizam by the Company known as Old John. And yet there are just certain conditions which render it necessary that a departure from the etiquette of the past should be made in the interests of the many thousands, whose weal is concerned, and who look beyond their own rulers up to the British Indian Government for a redress of grievances, if not for conditions making for presperity and good living.

No one therefore can blame Government for the action which is now about to be taken by the Viceroy. Many years ago Hyderabad might have been annexed if Government had desired to do so. The State was in debt and difficulty; there was serious trouble about the appointment of a Dewan, and altogether the condition of the common people was such that if Government had refused to continue their privileges, and did away with the nominal independence which has been so scrupulously maintained, it would perhaps have been better for the farming and manufacturing classes. Lord Dalhousie decided years ago that the State should not be annexed, and it has remained independent up to the present time. The great trouble in 1848 was the appointment of a proper Dewan. The Nizam preferred to have for Dewan a man who was willing to pay a large sum of money for the positior, but Government objected to this on the ground that such a person would be sure to reimburse himself in additional taxation and unnecessary exaction. While abstaining from any needless interference with the Nizam, Lord Dalhousie made it very plain that certains conditions would have to be fulfilled if such independence was to be continued and recognised. All that the Indian Government desired then, as they do now, was and is to ensure the greatest happiness of the people residing in the State. The position which Lord Dufferin will have to take now is very much the same as that taken on a previous occasion, where the conditions were plainly stated which were essential to independent action.

It is all nonsense to suppose that because a Native S ate is permitted to occupy a position of independence, that therefore its officials can proceed to acts of injustice and oppression. It is necessary that the Nizam as well as all other Native State rulers should be warned that when the ruling authorities so contrive to mismanage affairs as to involve the State in debt and disorder, and their lack of administration leads to disturbance and unrest, that Government is determined peremptorily to step in and adjust matters, even to the recalling of those privileges which were accorded in bygone times. We have no doubt that the Viceroy will take precisely this position when dealing with Hyderabad affairs, and we feel sure that the Nizam will feel the necessity for making up his mind to a change of programme. The want and happiness of the people must have a larger share of his Highness's attention, and he must resolve at once to secure the services of men in the administrative departments of this S ate who will love justice and not depart from the paths of rectitude. The counsel and advice of the Viceroy is sure to have a good effect, since it will be the advice of one well skilled in the art of good government, and, above all, of one who can enforce grave penalties if it is not accepted and carried out.

BENGAL.

THE Englishman says that it is probable that Mr. Robert Hardie, Secretary and Treasurer of the Bank of Bengal, may retire in the first half of next year. Mr. Gordon, the chief Accountant, also intends applying for leave to retire about March next.

CALCUTTA DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF POLICE.—Colonel Wilkinson, on return from privilege leave, will officiate as Deputy Commissioner of Police during Mr. Lambert's absence, Mr. Giles continuing to act as Deputy Inspector-General of Police. It is probable that Mr. Lambert will not return to his appointment, being otherwise provided for in the political Department.

DEATH OF A GALLANT OLD SOLDIER.—The death at Barrackpore, on the 29th October, is announced of Mr. Henry Hartigan, for many years keeper of the Calcutta High Court. Mr. Hartigan came to Iudia in 1845 with the 9th Lancers, served through the Punjab Campaign, and was granted the Victoria Cross for an act of daring bravery during the Indian Mutiny. Many will no doubt remember Stray Leaves, a publication in which Mr. Hartigan relates his experiences as an old campaigner. Mr. Hartigan's funeral was a military one. The coffin, draped with the Union Jack, was drawn on a gun carriage to the cemetery, where three volleys were fired as the coffin was lowered into the grave. For many years Mr. Hartigan was a familiar figure at the High Court, and his death will be felt by a numerous circle of friends and others, amongst all of whom he was a favourite.

Mr. C. E. Warner.—No trace has yet been obtained of Charles-Edward Warner, late Manager of the Singer Manufacturing Company in Calcutta, who is alleged to have absconded with something like Rs. 5,000 from that Company's branch in that city. A Calcutta paper says:—"The police have ascertained that, a day or two previous to his sudden disappearance, he remitted a sumof Rs. 2,300 to his mother at Bombay, and paid off debts which he contracted in Calcutta to the extent of about Rs. 2,000. As it was expected that he would leave India altogether, a detective was sent to Diamond Harbour, and telegrams have been sent to-Bombay and other stations, but, up to the present, without any success, he having evidently evaded the vigilance of the detective-force more successfully than was anticipated. There was a rumour that a day or two before Warner gave the police the slip he had invested in a brass thalce and lotah, so the probabilities are thought to be that he is going about in disguise as a byraghi or jogee, and making his way for Cuttack and False Point, intending from thereto take steamer for some other port."

MADRAS.

Major Moone, Military Secretary to the Governor of Madras, retires from the Army to take up his appointment as Acting President of the Madras Municipality. Mr. MacCartie, the lateresident, leaves for Rangoon as a Mounted Volunteer.

THE "PROFESSIONAL HORSE" AGAIN.—The Civil and Military.

Gazette says:—"Our esteemed correspondent, Mr. Ananias Downin-the-Plains, informs us that the following telegram has been despatched from the Southern Presidency to the Lord Mayor-elect of London:—'Keep place in your show for Thomas's horse.

Arrives with Sullivan, who represents Madras in show."

THE CASE OF THE "GOORHA."—Our Madras correspondent telegraphs the 5th iust.:—"Last January a Dr. Currie charged the officers and some passengers of the Goorkha with throwing him overboard. The case was dismissed by the magistrate, and on appeal the captain and chief officer then filed suits against Dr. Currie for damages on account of malicious prosecution, claiming. Rs. 5,000 each. The captain's case has now been finally disposed of, judgment being given to-day for Rs. 2,000 damages and costs. The chief officer's claim remains undisposed of, as he is in London sick."

Madras Municipal President. — Major George M. Moore, R.A, who has been Military Secretary to the Givernor of Madras since 1st April, 1884, has sent in his papers, and will retire from the Army in order to take up the appointment of Acting President of the Madras Municipality, which has been conferred upon him by his Excellency. Mr. Gordon Mackenzie, C.S., the present President, now on furlough in Europe, will not return to the Municipality, but will be otherwise provided for. Major Moore will probably not vacate his present appointment until the 7th proximo, the date of the Governor's retirement.

During Monday night of November 8 the wind was blowing a gale. It increased in force on Tuesday, and at one o'clock the hurricane was at its height. A great deal of damage has been done to trees and plants, which have been torn up-by their roots or otherwise wrecked. The roads in several places are blocked with uprooted trees. The sea washed part of Royapuram away. The waves were immense. The stamers in harmour had gone to seathe night before, and returned yesterday. A breach occurred on the Madras Railway, and telegraphic communication was interrupted between Pudi and Tripati, and a bildge at the eighty-first mile from Madras was wrecked. A temporary bridge which is incourse of construction will probably be finished in three weeks. Meanwhile passengers proceeded from one train to another acrossthe bed of the river, and the English mail has not yet been delivered here. Sir Auckland Colvin is detained here owing to the breaks.

BOMBAY.

LADY REAY, attended by Captain Phayre, Aide-de-Camp to his Excellency the Governor, arrived in Bombay, and is staying at-Government House, Malabar Point. Lord Reay has returned to-Bombay.

On Monday the High Court re-opened after the October vacation. Mr. Justice Bayley, Mr. Justice Scott, and Mr. Justice Jardine presided in the three Division Courts on the Original Side. The Onief Justice, Mr. Justice West, Mr. Justice Nanabhat Haridas, and Mr. Justice Birdwo d sat in full Courc on the Appellate Side.

THE Hon. Mahadeo Govind Ranade, a member of the Finan Committee, has gone back to Calcutta to attend the sitting the Committee there.

Ow the application of H.II. the Nizam's Government, the Government of India have sanctioned the appointment of Mr. A. J. Dunlop as Inspector-General of Revenue, Hyderabad, for a further period of four years. The original appointment was only for one year, which expired in May last.

The following resolution by the Bombay Government is dated the 5th inst.:—"Major-General H. F. Hancock, R. E., having teen selected by the Government of India to fill the appointment of Director-General of Railways in India, when that appointment becomes vacant in December rext, his connection with this Presidency will shortly cease. His Excellency the Right Honth Governor in Council desires to place on record his high appreciation of General Hancock's services in all matters connected with the development of the railway system in the Bombay Presidency, and to express regret at losing an officer of such great ability and experience."

The Hop. Mr. Justice Bayley returned to Bombay last week, after spending his six months' leave on the continent. He spent most of his time in travelling in Switzerland, where he was much benefited in health. In addition to his duty as a judge, he has resumed his other duties as President of the Bombay Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and as Colonel of the Bombay Volunteer Corps. He visited the Bai Sakarhai Dinshaw Petit Hospital for animals one evening, and also went over the Bombay Veterinary College, and had a lorg talk with Veterinary-Surgeon J. H. Steel, Principal of the College, in regard to the management of the hospital and conduct of the college. Mr. Bayley seemed to be much pleased with various improvements introduced in connection with both the institutions. There are at present more than a hundred indoor animal patients at the hospital for treatment.

THE LATE HON. JAMES GIBBS.—The many friends of the Hon.

James Gibbs. C.S.I., C.I.E., in this Presidency as well as at the seat of the Supreme Government, where he worked during the latter part of his career as Senior Member of the Viceroy's Council, will be sorry to hear of his death at home, of which telegraphic intelligence was received on Monday Mr. Gibbs's career in this country, extending over no less than forty years, was a very useful if not a very brilliant one; and he finally reticed from the public service on the 1st May, 1885, as one of the most popular men of the time in India. The career of tew members of the Civil Service has been attended with such uniform success as that of Mr. Gibbs, especially in this Presidency, where he spent the best years of his life. In the performance of all his duties, who her in private life or in his official capacity he brought into play a singular amount of tact, good nature, and bonhomnie, which gained him many friends, and the general respect and esteem of the community. In Bombay, as Member of Council, he was the right-hand man during the Governorship of Sir Richard Temple; and as Senior Member of the Viceroy's Council he was an able and judicious condjutor of Lord Ripon. His prior servic's as Judicial Assistant Comissioner in Sind, as Special Income-Tax Commissioner in Bombay, as Agent for the Governor of the Sirdars in the Deccan, as a Judge of the High Court, as Vice Chancellor of the University of Bombay, &c., were no less valuable and not less generally appreciated.—Bombay Gazette.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH AND PUNJAB.

ABOUT 1,000 chests of Ouds and North-West indigo have sarrived in Calcutta, of which about 200 have been sold, chiefly for America. They fetched from Rs. 170 to Rs. 285 per maund, leing about Rs. 10 below last year's average rates. The quality of the indigo, so far, promises to be good. The first public sale of INa ive indigo will probably be held early. No European marks have as yet arrived, nor are they expected for at least a fortnight, as, owing to the damp weather, the indigo is drying very slowly.

As inaugural meeting of the new Punjab Association, in aid of social progress and education in India, over which Sir Charles Aitchison will preside, was to be held at the Lawrence Hall, Punjab, on Friday. The new association will absorb into itself the S keba Sabhas, or the Lahore Female Education Committee, and will firm a branch of the National India Association at Home, which has similar ains in view, and enjoys the patronage of the Tunder the patronage of the Duke and Duchess of Commaught. Sir Charles Aitchison will be President of the Council, and Ludy Aitchison President of the Ladies' Committee. It has the support of the leading members of both the European and Native community, and a career of usefulness may fairly be anticipated for it.

The Secretary of State's formal authorisation for the assembly of the new Legislative Council of the North West Provinces and Oudh, says the Pioneer, is still only expected. "The final despatch in the subject from this side went home on the 14th of August last. But the reply by cable, which was requested, is apparently to defer to the precedent of a quarter of a century back, when an elaborate document from home, bearing the Secretary of State's signature, ushered a Council into existence in Bingal. However, b. tween this date and the 1st of December, when it is proposed that the provisions of the Councils Act shall take effect here, there is ample time for the required document to arrive. All besides is settled. The Council will consist of the Lieutenant Governor and nine members, of whom five will be non-officials, and of these non-officials one will be a European and four Natives of India. The Legal Remembrancer will be exofficio Secretary to the Council."

CIVIL OFFICERS of the North-West Province, who have been on furlough are beginning to flock back as usual at the commencement of the cold weather. Mr. Sells has gone to Meerut as Judge and relieved Mr. Wyer, who was to have gone to Saharanpur in place of Mr. Impey, posted to Naini Tal, vice Mr. Giles, appointed Under-Secretary, and Mr. Casey who has overstayed his leave; but it is believed it is now possible that Mr. Wyer may stay at Meerut, Mr. Burkitt goes back to Muttra, relieving Mr. Alexander; and Mr. J. Kennedy is posted to Etawah as Collector, relieving Mr. Hoey. Mr. Neil returns to Bareilly; but Mr. Ferrar, of Etah, who was due in December, has obtained an extension of leave for ten months. Mr. J. C. Williams, who has been at home for nearly four years, is at last coming out, but it is not easy to fit him with an appointment. Messrs. D. Roberts, Denniston, Redfern, Hardy, Pears, and Fraser are all due very shortly, but are not posted to Hamirpur as Collector, ousting Mr. Whish; and Colonel Fisher, who retires f om Civil employ on reaching fifty-five years of age, will be succeeded in Garhwal by Mr. J. S. Campbell, a Civilian of only three years' standing. Mr. H. B. Harington, Officiating Commissioner of Rai Pareilly, completes his fifty-fifth year on the 18th instant, and will have to retire, unless he is granted an extension of service.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE TRUTH ABOUT AMERICA.*

The purposes of Mr. Money's book are threefold—first, to enlighten the British public in regard to their kinsmen across the Atlantic; second, to put emigrants on their guard against the machinations of agents in London; and, thirdly, to proclaim the prairies of the Colorado district as a "locale" for those who suffer from pulmonary affections. We are, of occurse, not in a position to speak with authority as to the mede in which the author has acquitted himself of his task, but his pages are temperate and fair, and seem on the face of them to be truthful and trustworthy. Mr. Money, indeed, simply narrates his own experience. He went to an agent in this country, who beguiled him to proceed to the "Antelope Valley," which was pictured in glowing colours as an Earthly Paradise. The first experience was that he had selected—or. rather, the agent had selected for him in order to earn a commission—a route longer by 1,500 miles than the direct line across the Continent, while being some hundreds of miles more south the climate was, of course, much hotter, and more unpleasant for travelling with "emigrant tickets." But imagine Mr. Money's surpriso when, on arriving at his destination, he found the "happy valley" a howling wilderness of uncultivated and unculturable waste; and here incidentally Mr. Money tells his readers, what we own we did not know, that a large portion of America is randy desert, little less unpromising than the wilds of Africa or the plains of Tart-ry. But this if portion of his experiences was pitable in the extreme, a suredly his memories of Colorado must be enchanting to the last degree. The mouth of envy waters as the charms of this lovely spot are described, and one only wonders not that the death-rate is but 56 per 1,000, but why anyone is so foolish as to die at all when air, climate, scenery, sun, and water are each and all incomparable. But what about the Colorado beetle? Not a word does Mr. Money vouchsafe as to this enemy of mankind.

It only remains to add that if in the future emigrants still continue to be deceived by flattering pictures of promising spots and earthly paradises, the fault will not be chargeable at the door of Mr. Money, but must rather be attributed to careless indifference on the part of those who, for a few shillings, can learn the "truth about America."

LIVING OR DEAD.+

"Living or Dead" having already appeared in the columns of England, is, of course, known to a large circle of readers. Nevertheless, its appearance in a compact form will be welcomed by many who dislike the disjointed and di-rupted mode of publication which the production of a novel in a weekly paper necessarily involves. That the tale is powerfully written may, perhaps, be taken for granted—all Mr. Conway's works justify this criticism—but the plot is open, we think, to the objection that every reader can at a glance unravel the thread of mystery which the chief actors in the scene seem powerless to disentangle. At every turn the reflection imperceptibly occurs, "why does not such and such a person lift the screen which the author draws across the stage of life? Connot he see that the dead is not dead, but liveth?" Consequently, when the dénouement comes, the unexpected is little more than the expected—the crisis is no crisis. This defect, to our judgment, somewhat mars the charm of the romance. On the other hand, there is much to recommend the tale—first, the absence of that sickly, sentimental love making which happens in life chiefly amongst gaping youths and gushing school-girls, but the narration of which disgusts rather than amuses—at least, as regards such of the readers as are beyond their teens. Next, it cannot be denied that the unravelling of their teens. Next, it cannot be denied that the unravelling of the mystery, albeit somewhat is anticipated, is masterly and attractive. As the web of villainy which marred the happiness of two happy beings is gradually disclosed, and the fiendish rascality of a fiend in human guise is laid bare step by step, feelings of horror, revenge, delight and astonishment become so intermingled, that to the author must be ascribed the rôle of a successful novelist.

Then, lastly, all ends so satisfactorily; the villain meets his dues, the wrong is righted, and though nothing can blot out bygone times—the eternity of the past is everlasting and unchangeable—yet the present is happy and the future hopeful. Old steps totter along in peaceful bliss towards the land where darkness is no darkness, and the night is as the light of day. Young souls disport themselves in the sunshine of prosperity, Young souls disport themselves in the sunshine of prosperity, their memories dwelling more perhaps on the happiness of to day than the troubles of yesterday. So the reader closes the book at peace with all mankind, pleased that the dead are living and the living dead; joyous that lives marred for years are in the end passed in tranquillity and bliss, and thankful to Mr. Conway's fertile imagination for a gratifying couple of hours spent in the lap of pleasure and delight.

FOOD GRAINS OF INDIA.*

Mr. Church is too well known as a scientist in matters relating to food-products to leave it open to doubt that his present Handbook to the food-grains of India, which he modestly cal's "elementary," would be complete in every point bearing on all subject; which he has undertaken so to elucidate as to furnish to Indian officials and to students of Indian agriculture a compact account of the alimentary value of the chief food-grains of pact account of the alimentary value of the chief food-grains of our Eastern Empire."

The researches of the author, and the new analysis made by himself, are more important than, perhaps, he admits; but he most bandsomely acknowledges that his work rests to a great degree on the investigations of a predecessor. "After all," he tells us, "it is to the indefatigable labours of Dr. Forbes Watson't hat I am chiefly indebted.'

The opening chapters of the treatise deal mainly with the constituent parts of food-stuffs, and with the indispensable proportion which must exist between these constituents in order to the "dietary" being of the most nutritious kind. If the phraseology occasionally reminds one of hospitals and gaols, the matter is rlainly put before the reader, and in such a manner as to show its universal applicability. So much work, so much food, is the rule of consumption in all parts of the world; it is another form of the old saying give and take; only it must be remembered that, as in the proverb, the giving comes first—we must, so to speak, repair waste before creating it.

From page 34 onwards we come to the consideration of the From page 34 onwards we come to the consideration of the nutrient qualities of the various cereals and pulses produced in India. Of these the majority are, of course, indigenous; though it is not a little interesting to see how many (such as the lupin from Levant, the maize from South America, and others) have been acclimatised to the great benefit of the Peninsula.

We are glad to see that Mr. Church lays great—though by no means undue—stress on the excellence of the various bean species. All vegetarians (with the sole exception, we believe, of Pytnagoras, who says, in the Golden Verses, "that a man may as well for the wickedness of the thing, eat his own grandmother well, for the wickedness of the thing, eat his own grandmother as meddle with beans") have insisted on the nutritious powers of as meddle with beans ) have insisted on the nutritious powers of this invaluable legume. It is no new saying, that nature, with the bane, supplies the antidote, and a curious corroboration of the old saw is found in the fact that "the ash of the straw or stems and leaves" of one of the varieties of the bean is used to counteract the deficiency of saline matter in the seed.

The author has wisely followed, in most cases, the plan of giving the proportions of the constituent parts per oz. or per lb., a far clearer manner of stating this important point to the uninformed than setting out the percentages. It would be wise to adopt this plan in the few cases in which it has not been able little handbook, the moderate price of which renders it accessible to all. The descriptions of the various plants, if brief, are clear as to their original habitat, their cultivation, and their use. No praise can be too high for the illustrations. All are good, and some (especially those facing pp. 56, 66, 80, 107, 136, 140, 179) are so lifelike as to demand a warm tribute of admiration.

We augur important results from the proper use of this valu-

ITS OWN REWARD.*

The chief personage in this bright little story is the daughter of a country parson whose perseverance in well doing it is which brings its own reward; in what form we shall not disclose. Sent, sorely against her will, but going as a matter of duty, to cheer, and be a companion to, an eccentric and most unpromising aunt, she succeeds at length in winning at Marketboro', as she had done in her own home all hearts, her aunt's included teaching her "the in her own home, all hearts, her aunt's included, teaching her "the great lesson on which most things turn—to love." Aylmer, Ethel's father, is depicted as a clergyman of that sensible and tolerant type specimens of which are all too few in number in these days of extreme in all things. In one thing especially many might profitably follow his example. He "advocated temperance rather than total abstinence. He could see no reason why it should huit any man to take a glass of beer with his dinner; drinking for the sake of drinking he condemned most decidedly." Ethel is as far removed as possible from the (too often semi-professional) lady nurse. She is simply a gentle, kind-hearted girl, who has been taught the meaning of Christian sympathy, and has never forgotten the lesson. No reader—and the book will have many—will grudge her patient consistency "its own reward." The little volume is pleasantly written and prettily got up. It is well adapted for presentation at the approaching festive season.

The "Army and Navy Magazine" (W. H. Allen & Co.) continues to improve under its present editor's hands. The December number contains much readable matter, besides the translations from the German and Franch, which have been posited before A. A. derman and French, which have been noticed before. A lady (Edith E. Cuthell) contributes an excellent paper on "Nursing in Indian Military Hospitals," but she seems to take rather a gloomy view of the country, in which she says "the fever field and King Cholera are ever present." This is a little hard upon India, if one may judge of its climate by the appearance of returned Anglor and the Lydia Office and the climate by the appearance of the presence of the country Indians at the India Office and the clubs. Such appearances do not recall "unpalatable, unwholesome food," but excellent eating and drinking and digestions that wait on appetite. The "Phantom Piper," by the veteran "Gineral" John Augustus O'Shea, is a well written sketch, which will amply repay perusal. The theme of "Liberty," which has been the inspiration of so many a poet's song, has allured Mr. Frederick Pincott into melodious verse. Mr. M. J. Colquhoun commences a promising serial in "Every Inch a Soldier," and a description of "Toulon, Maritime and Military," and the pleasantly written "On Leave" papers, help to make up a very good number of this excellent magazine.

We have received a series of maps relating to the East by T. Ruddiman Johnston, F.R.G.S., of which it will suffice to say that they are clear, large, and simple, each being devoted to one particular point. For instance, one map gives the coast-line and rivers, another the province; a third, the population; a fourth, minerals, &c, &c. This modern style is a great improvement upon the old-fashioned method of including all and everything in one confused mass. The Commercial Atlas of India also merits a word of commendation of commendation.

THE AVAILS' HOME .- A few mouths ago some friends of the Ayahs' Home agreed to make an endeavour to collect a sum sufficient to prevent its being abandoned. The idea of its abandonment had been entertained owing to the destruction of the house in which it was formerly held in consequence of railway the house in which it was formerly held in consequence of railway extension. We regret, however, to learn that, notwithstanding the zealous exertions of the ladies of the committee, the £100, which was the sum required, has not yet been collected, there being a deficiency of £40. The fact that one poor woman was recently taken from a workhouse to the home shows the necessity and the usefulness of this excellent institution. #### LORD DUFFERIN AND THE NATIVE PRESS.

According to a Times telegram Lord Dufferin, during his visit to Poonah last week, took the opportunity of giving a well-deserved reproof to the Native Press. Replying to an address from a Native Association, he said, with reference to the recently appointed Public Service Commission:

When the Government has succeeded, after many years' persistent efforts, in obtaining a re-examination of the conditions of the Indian Civil Service, it is indeed a matter for surprise that there should be found, not among you—for I am happy to say you have repudiated so unworthy an insinuation—but among some who represent themselves as guides and leaders of Indian public opinion, men so incapable of appreciating the character of English rule and its representatives as to assert that the only object of the Government in appointing the Commission is to deceive the people of India, and to resort to a base, mean, and abominable trick for the purpose of restricting still further the privileges of those who are justly anxious to serve the Sovereign. Among the many disheartening incidents which I have experienced, none has Among the more pained and surprised me than the discovery that men who profess to represent the educated opinion of India should conceive the possibility of Her Majesty's Government and the Indian Administration conspiring to pass a fraud upon her Native subjects.

It will be noticed that his Excellency confesses to the sad experience which has been the lot of all Euglishmen who have served their country in India in official appointments-the experience of " many disheartening incidents" the most painful of which he allows to be the discovery that, in spite of all that English justice and generosity can do, evil motives will be attributed, and falsehoods spread widecast throughout the land against our rule. But this condition of things will have to be endured until the "whirligig of time brings in its revenges." At present there is no real representative of Indian public opinion on the Native Press-for that Native public opinion has yet to be formed. Those who pretend to be guides and leaders are charlatans, who have no touch or true sympathy with the masses. The writers who accuse the Government of all manner of deceit hardly know the meaning of the words they use, and certainly do not understand the liberty which they are allowed to enjoy in using them. There is no remedy for the misrepresentation complained of but repression or patience. It would be foolish to attempt the former, and it is trying to have to accept the latter. But this is what will have to be done by Lord Dufferin and his successors for years yet before the Native Press of India becomes alive to its own powers and responsibilities.

THE STANDARD LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

THE correspondence which we published in our last week's issue regarding the position of Iudian Policyholders with the above named Company has drawn forth a further explanation from the headquarters office at Edinburgh. Summarised, this explanation is as follows:-(1) That where an alternative place of payment is stated in the policy the option lies by rule of law with the office and not with the policy-holders. (2) That the office are willing, however, to give the option to the policy-holder at this date on his agreeing to pay future premiums in the same currency as he elects that his policy shall be paid in. (3) That in the event of the policy holders making no option the office will declare their option at date of payment in accordance with the currency in which future premiums are paid from this date (4) That when the sum assured comes to be paid the bonus will be paid in the same currency, a bonus at the rate of one per cent., for example, being paid as £1 when the sum assured is paid in sterling, and as Rs. 10 when the sum assured is paid in rupees. This appears to meet the points touched upon in our correspondent "B.'s" letter. It is only natural that policyholders situated like himself should be anxious to know exactly how they stand with reference to their contract with the Company; and there appears to be every desire on the part of the latter to give full explanation of all doubts, and to interpret the clauses of the contracts in a wise and conciliatory spirit.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

We don't expect any good result from the Civil Service Com-ission. We want the Civil Service to be thrown open to both Europeans and Natives. We do not want the Government to show any particular favour to Natives. The arrangement now going to be made will be more injurious than beneficial. The Cornmission will only suggest means for the admission of Natives to appointments generally held by the members of the Civil Service. appointments generally held by the members of the Givil Service. In other words, its real object is to improve the status of the statutory Civil Service created by Lord Lytton. However, we have some hopes, for Sir Charles Aitchison is the President of the Commission. We hope that at this critical moment all our Native contemporaries will forget their mutual differences and jealousies, and do their best for the good of the country.—The Suravi and Pataki.

The resolution has given the provincial Government power to elect members to the Civil Service Commission. We hope the elect members to the Civil Service Commission. We hope the Native Associations also will be entrusted with the power of electing members. The people of the whole country will be satisfied if the British Indian, Indian Union, and the two Muhammadan Associations are allowed to do so. Sir Rivers Thompson will have to be careful in selecting members from among the officials. We shall not be satisfied unless we find the name of Mr. Cutton in the list. Sir Rivers will have to make arrangements for the representation of all sections of the people.—The Sahachar.

The resolution of the Viceroy is likely to do us more harm than good. We hope that all the political Associations will keep an eye on the doings of the Commission. The Anglo-Indian newspapers will probably say that we are ungrateful for clamouring against a Commission which the Viceroy has appointed for our benefit. But we cannot believe that this resolution has been issued for our benefit.—The Bharatbasi.

LADY DUFFERIN'S FUND.

We shall be glad if female doctors are appointed for the treatment of Indian females. We shall be glad if more money is collected for Lady Dufferin's Fund. But it will be a matter of deep regret if the people are oppressed and hara-sed for this purpose. In the meeting held at Simla the other day, Sir Lepel Griffin, the would-be Lieutenant-Governor of the Panjab, proposed that arrangements should be made for raising money for the fund from the middle and lower classes, and that the district officers have the contribute. We are entirely consent to should invite people to contribute. We are entirely opposed to proposals of this nature. The invitation of the Magistrate means an order, and officials ought not to be directly or indirectly entrusted with powers to raise money.—The Sahachar.

The noble object of Lady Dufferin's Fund will be defeated the noble object of Lady Dufferin's Fund will be defeated through the fault of evil advisers. It will be dangerous if Sir L pel Griffin's suggestions are carried out. We beg to warn Mr. Ilbert and Sir Auckland. Sir Lepel has always acted high-handedly towards the Native princes. Will Lady Dufferin encourage this high-handedness? If her Ladyship accepts such evil advice her efforts for the good of India will do a great deal of harm.—The Nababibhakar and Sadharani.

Kashmir.—Providence is not favourably disposed towards Kashmir. The vultures are sill clamouring. There is no cessation of the desire to do mischief. The right hand of the Maharaja Babu Nilamber Mukerji, has left Kashmir, and is now in Calcutta. We hear that proposals are being made for the dismissal of Dewan Gobind Sahey. His fault is that he was favourably inclined to the Bengali officers. Besides, he proposed reductions in the salary of several big wigs. Like Babu Nilamber he had the welfare of Kashmir at heart. Can there be any other punishment for this crime than dismissal? Are we to believe that there is no cluse for apprehension regarding Kashmir?—The Dainit. for apprehension regarding Kashmir ?-The Dainik.

AT Kohat, on the 8th ult., Sepoy Aziz Khan, of the 4th Sikh Infantry, was sentenced by a court-martial to seven years' transportation for disobeying orders and drawing his bayonet and stab-bing Lieutenant J. A. Brown in the arm. Sir Frederick Roberts has, however, commuted the punishment to imprisonment with hard latour for two years, giving the following as his reasons:— "The prisoner has committed two of the gravest military offences which it is possible for a soldier to commit; he disobeyed an order, and he used his arms against the person of an officer. But I have considered it right to mitigate the punishment which the general court-martial has justly awarded him, because it is proved by the evidence of Lieutenant Brown himself that he provoked the assault by hitting the prisoner with his open hand on the back. In raising his hand against a sepoy, Lieutenant Brown acted in a most unofficer-like manner, directly tending to the subversion of discipline, and deserving of the strongest condemnation. I hereby publicly and severely reprimand Lieutenant Brown for his conduct, which no provocation can excuse, and which proves him to be unfit to hold the responsible position of Adjutant. Lieutenant Brown is now Ac ing Adjutant to the 4th Sikh Infantry; he is deprived of his appointment, and will revert to his duty as Wing Officer."

THE LATE MR. CHARLES GREVILLE MANSEL.

The death of Mr. Charles Greville Mansel, which occurred at The death of Mr. Charles Greville Mansel, which occurred at Brighton on the 19th inst., in his eightieth year, probably removes, with the exception of Sir George Clerk, the oldest surviving member of the East India Company's service. It is much to be feared that the mention of his name will fail to convey any precise sense of less at the present day, although a generation back his death would have been considered either the class of a distinguished capacity of the class of a distinguished capacity or the class of a distinguished capacity or the class of a distinguished capacity or the contract of the class of a distinguished capacity or the capacity or the class of a distinguished cap the close of a distinguished career or the cutting short of one of still greater promise. Sir Robert Montgomery, who succeeded him on the Punjab Board more than thirty-five years ago, is the him on the Punjab Board more than thirty-five years ago, is the only one of his contemporaries who could do justice to Mr. Mansel's services and character. A retirement dating from the Mutiny, if not before, was not calculated to keep the name of one who was regarded as among the most able amiable of Thomason's school prominently before those of his countrymen who feel an interest in Indian matters; yet it was owing to his reputation gained under Mertins Bird and Thomason, as well as bis good services in the North-West Provinces, that Lord Dalhousie in 1849 made him the junior member of the board to which housie in 1849 made him the junior member of the board to which he entrusted the administration and reorganisation of the great province of the Punjab, which had just been annexed. Mr. Bosworth Snith, in his biography of Lord Lawrence, says that he was a man of contemplation rather than of action, and also that he was of more equable and philosophic temperament than either ne was or more equable and philosophic temperament than either John or Henry Luwrence. In a minor degree than these mer, but still to a great extent, he deserves the credit of having erected on the ruins of Runjeet Sngh's kingdom a well-ordered and throughly tranquillised province, now beyond question the most loyal part of the lnd an Empire. This was a great and remarkable work. To ignore Mr. Mansel's share in it would imply ingratitude. Yet it is impossible to invest it with any present interest. Mr. Mansel was a type of the best Indian official, but he just missed becoming famous among Anglo-Indians. If regard were raid only to what at an early period he was considered likely to achieve, his subsequent career would be pronounced disappointing, but it must be remembered that he was not only mixed up in great events but in contact with great men. His name will be mentioned in books of history side by side with the Lawrences; but, as in every other pursuit of life, the greater members of the Punjab Board overshadowed the less even to the point of almost obliterating the memory of the octogenarian civilian whose decease is now recorded.

London Chartered Bank of Australia —The half-yearly extraordinary general meeting of the proprietors of the London Chartered Bank of Australia was held list week at the Cannon-Chartered Bank of Australia was held list week at the Cannon-stree: Hotel, Sir James Garrick, Q.C., K.C.M.G., Agent-General for Queensland, in the chair. An abstract of profit and loss account at 30th June last showed that after putting aside £30,000 to dividend, to be paid at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, there remained £28,922 16., of which £20,000 was carried to the reserve fund, bringing it up to £120,000, and the balance was carried forward to next half-year. The chairman, in moving the adoption of the abstract, congratulated the share-holders on the fact that the reserve fund had been brought up to its former amount in so comparatively short a time and during a by no means flourishing period. He was glad to be able to say that, notwithstanding the adverse times that had been experiened in the colonies, business continued to improve steadily on satisfactory lines. The present seeson was one of the best that Australia had experienced for some years, and this, together with the better prices now ruling for Australian produce, could not fail to largely modify the effects of the past two seasons, and have a beneficial influence on business generally. As a bank connected with Australia they natural y looked forward to deriving in due course some advantage from the Colonial Exhibition that had just oeen closed, and from the greater attention that was being directed to the colonies which would lead to a more intimate knowledge of the resources of Australia. Mr. Henriques seconded the resolution. In reply to a shareholder the chairman said that the board had not yet come to any conclusion as to the amount at which the reserve fund should be fixed. They would effect an augmentation in their dividend as soon as they felt quite secure in their reserve fund. Dr. Drysdale expressed his entire satisfacin their reserve fund. Dr. Drysdale expressed his entire satisfaction with the course pursued by the directors, and hoped that the reserve fund would be made £200,000. Mr. Field suggested that if next year there should be a further balance of £20,000 half of it should go towards increasing the dividends and the other half should be put in reserve. The resolution was agreed to, as was one confirming the election of Mr. Edward Keep as a director in the place of Mr. Watson. The meeting concluded with the usual vates of thanks votes of thanks.

Angio Indians are mentioned.

The object of the above work (originally published in 1875) is to give, in a conveniont form, sketches of some of the distinguished men who have materially assisted in building up the fabric of our great Indian Empire. The London Press bestowed a considerable amount of puiss on the former little volume, the Standard remarking that it should have been twice the size; while the Friend of India said that "every Anglo-Indian should read" what a London journal styled "a deoply interesting volume."

"VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journa's throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Yoice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian oeople.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian ceople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and consorvative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Purliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to fournalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

The Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 19th November; from Allahabad and Madras to the 17th November; and from Calcutta to the 16th November

THERE have been several severe encounters with dacoits in Upper Burma during the past week.

In a fight about the 8th inst., north of Shwaybo, Lieut. Balfour was fatally wounded; Mr. Ley, policesuperintendent, was also very severely wounded.

LIEUT. ECKERSLEY, of the 51st Light Infantry, has been shot dead while leading an assault on the encampment of the Kemendine Mintha at Kyetha Myo.

CAPTAIN VAUGHAN, commanding at Kyoykmyoung, has attacked part of Nga Naing's gang, killing nineteen and wounding twelve.

LIEUT.-COLONEL ANDERSON, 3rd Madras Infantry, marching with 100 men from Yemethen to Ningyan, was attacked by a large party of rebels at Cahuli. The enemy was repulsed with heavy loss. On our side Colonel Anderson was shot through the neck, four privates were killed, and five wounded.

THE 3rd Hyderabad Cavalry have gained another success over the dacoits, a squadron under Colonel Fitzgerald having cut up a band of them, killing twenty and nearly capturing the notorious Nga Yuie.

THE VICEROY has spent the past few days in Bombay. On his return from his trip in the Clive on Saturday, he was presented with an address by the Municipal Corporation. In the evening a levée and drawing-room took place in the Secretariat.

THE Princes and Chiefs at present in Bombay were invited by the Viceroy to an evening party at Government House at ten o'clock on Sunday evening last; and most of them responded to the invitation.

On Tuesday the Viceroy and Lady Dufferin attended an amateur performance in aid of Lady Dufferin's fund at the Gaiety Theatre, and on Thursday his Excellency distributed the prizes at the Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy School of Arts.

THE hurricane that passed over Madras on the 9th inst. was the most severe of recent years. Great damage was done to property. The Swarnamukhi bridge on the North-West line, eighly-one miles from Madras, collapsed entirely.

Owing to the detention of the Madras mail by the floods, the departure of last week's mail-steamer was delayed for a day.

The captain and four of the crew of the Mount Lebanon have died of cholera on the voyage from Calcutta to Naples.

In the Hyderabad Polo Tournament, the Bombay Gymkhana team, which won the cup last year, has been defeated by the Nizam's Palace team.

Close upon twenty teams have entered for the Punjab Polo Tournament; and the prospects of good sport are, therefore, of the brightest.

THE rules of the Punjab Polo Tournament are published. They mark an important and sensible departure in Rule 29, which lays down that no player "shall ride at an adversary at any angle whatever. If wishing to ride off, he must range alongside, then close."

It is now understood that General Martin Dillon, C.B., goes to the Rawul Pindi Division on the transfer of the Duke of Connaught, and that Sir Charles Gough will probably go to Lucknow from Allahabad.

It is considered probable that in the event of General Allen Johnson's retirement from the Military Secretaryship at the India Office he will be succeeded by Colonel Newmarch.

THE Finance Committee are at present engaged in examining the registrars of the Calcutta High Court, with a view to ascertaining where scope for reductions offers.

Nothing will probably be settled about the tour or preliminary meetings of the Public Services Commission for about a fortnight, as the views of all the members upon these matters are now being taken, and the replies will take some time in receipt and consideration.

THE HON. W. W. HUNTER has been appointed Vice-Chancellor of the University of Calcutta, in succession tothe Hon. Mr. Ilbert, resigned.

THE HON. C. F. FERRAN has been appointed temporarily a judge of Her Majesty's High Court of Judicature at Bombay.

THE P. and O. steamer Peshawur, which arrived in Bombay on Tuesday with the English mails, encountered a severe cyclone, which raged for about twelve hours on the 13th inst. in the Indian Ocean. Fortunately no damage was done.

damage was done.

THE Lucknow-Sitapur Railway was finally opened by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces on Monday.

SIR ROPER and Lady Lethbridge were entertained at an afternoon party in Bombay on Tuesday by Khan Bahadar Byramjee Dadabhoy.

CHOLERA broke out at the Burkhar fair on the 10th inst. Four hundred were attacked, and half the cases proved fatal. The disease spread to Ajmere, where 200 died in two days. The outbreak has since much subsided.

Mr. RAMASWAMY MUDELIAR, C.I.E., has been appointed Sheriff of Madras for the ensuing year.

MR. THIRKELL WHITE, Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Burma, with a military escort, has gone on a mission to the Shan States.

Tuesday's mail steamer brought another instalment of cold weather visitors to India, among them being H.R.H. Prince Leopold of Prussia, Lord and Lady Wynford, Count Kanitz and Count Wedel.

OBITUARY.—The Rev. N. M. Waterbury, Baptist Telugu Mission, Madras; the Rev. G. Müller S.J., the oldest missionary of the Bombay Vicariate; Captain J. W. S. Mercer, 17th Bombay N.I.; Captain Arthur L. Dingwall Fordyce, Bombay Staff Corps, Assistant Political Agent, Mahikanta.

It is estimated that the coffee crops in Ceylon will give a yield of 150,000 cwts, but it is expected that there will be a yield of 13,000,000lbs. of tea.

HUMOUR takes strange forms occasionally. The following is the contents of a postcard received recently by a Calcutta paper:—
"The appointment of H.E. Sir Frederick S Roberts, G.C.B., to succeed Colonel Henderson as Superintendent of the Thuggee and Dacoity Department, will not be notified in the Gazette of India."

Two young subalterns—Lieutenants Henry De Beauvoir De Lisle, of the Durham Light Infantry, and William Richard Norton Annesley, of the Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment, aged respectively twenty-two and twenty-three—can claim to be the youngest decorés in Her Majesty's service, an honour that a few years back belonged to Mr. Frederick Cunningham, of the Bengal Civil Service, when he received the Order of the Indian Empire for his services of Political Officer in charge of the Khyber and Secretary to Sir Lepel Griffin in the Cabul Embassy. Lieutenant Annesley is son of an old Crimean and Indian hero in Major-General Annesley, late of the 97th.—Whitehall Review.

Notes of the Week.

THE news which comes by telegraph and Overland Mail regarding the condition of affairs in Burma continues to be of an unsatisfactory character. The Times correspondent has interviewed Sir Frederick Roberts in the same garlen pavilion where Theebaw was confined after his surrender, and he has thought that the British public would like to know that "by a curious coincidence my interview with General Roberts took place in the same room where exactly this day a year ago I saw the ex-King on the occasion when he dictated to me a defence of his reign."

This interesting fact he telegraphs, also that General Roberts had taken a twenty miles' ride, and was in perfect health, both interesting facts also; but the public would like to know more of the actual condition of things in Burma, both upper and lower, than is vouchsafed to them either in the telegrams of officials or in those of special correspondents.

A MILITARY contemporary complains very justly of this reticence, saying :—" The very meagre details which reach us as to the present operations now going on in Burma, and which may be regarded as the opening scenes of the fourth campaign, must be more than perplexing to those who have been accustomed to full telegraphic advices of even the most insignificant events in the various campaigns which we have entered into of recent years. It is now more than six weeks since the greater part of the reinforcements from India reached Rangoon, and were sent upcountry, yet since their arrival the public has learnt next to nothing of the movements of the various regiments which were detailed for employment. A recent telegram furnished the information that a portion of the South Yorkshire Regiment had been under fire, with the result that Lieutenant Balfour had fallen; and we now hear for the first time of an engagement fought near Poiboi on the 13th November, when Colonel W. H. Deedes and Corporal G. Deadman, both of the 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade, were severely wounded. Had it not been for these casualities, the fact that the Rifles had come into action would not have transpired. The public has surely the right to learn something more of what is going on?"

It is satisfactory to know that General Roberts takes a hopeful view of the position, as it certainly would be very unsatisfactory if he did not. But the views taken by the Press in India, and which we touch upon in another column, are not so assuring. That even after the hoped-for pacification in March next it will be necessary to retain no less than 16,000 regular troops to garrison Upper Burma alone is a serious consideration. It may be that before next summer we shall be pushed for men and munitions of war in the East, and that a strain to hold our own in more than one quarter will be a strain to which cur resources have hitherto never been put.

Under these circumstances an outburst of military reconomy may be wise or otherwise. The Supreme Government of India has ruled that the Madras gunpowder factory is to be abolished. A Madras officer writing from the spot says:—"The next order we may expect is that regiments shall lodge their rifles and be armed with sticks. The Bengal and Bombay arsenals, which supply Madras with balled ammunition, have proved themselves unequal to the task, inasmuch as we are informed that the reserve balled ammunition of the Madras Presidency is about one and a half million rounds below the quantity directed to be held in reserve. Again, at the commencement of the late Afghan War the Madras factory was indented upon by Bengal for one hundred thousand pounds of powder, which was quickly supplied. We are urgently in need of a small-arm ammunition factory in Madras, as neither Kirkee nor Dum Dum can be relied on." The Madras Chamber of Commerce has protested to the Secretary of State against the abolition, but Chambers of Commerce have little power to effect military arrangements. The Supreme Government recommend the saving, and that recommendation is likely to hold.

In the meantime Lord Dafferin is on tour through India receiving addresses from Native States and Municipalities, and replying to them in that felicitous way of which his Excellency is such a master. Sir Roper Lethbridge and the Hon. C. P. Ilbert have both, during the same week at Bombay, been telling the people of India how they love them. The reason of the former for revisiting India is chiefly to see again "old and beloved scenes, to awaken cherished memories, and to renew communion with old and dear friends, mostly Natives." Ilbert, though leaving the country, leaves his metaphoric heart behind him. He will still remember India, and it will be his dearest wish that he may be able hereafter, in how-ever humble a capacity, to further her interests. Even Lord Rosebery at that annual festival when Scotchmen honour the memory of their patron saint with bagpipes, whisky, and emotional oratory, took the deepest interest in the country, although he had been only eight days in it. He found amongst the Natives a liking for bagpipes and toddy; and what better things could a Scottish heart appreciate? Who dares to aver, after all these pleasant platitudes, that the millions of India are neglected by Englishmen?

SIR GEORGE BIRDWOOD will be glad to notice that his long and strong protest against the use of aniline dyes in Indian manufactures has at length awakened a protest amongst the Madras merchants. Five years ago India imported only 3 million ounces of aniline; last year she imported 11½ million ounces, thus showing the extent to which adulteration is being carried. An Indian contemporary, commenting upon the pernicious effect of this chemical on yarn and textile materials, says, however, some other means must be found to remedy the evil than that proposed by the Madras merchants. At a meeting the other day they resolved to petition the Government to pass an Act forbidding the introduction of aniline in indigo. Not only would such an Act be an unwarrantable interference with the freedom of commerce, but it would be evaded to such an extent as to be almost inoperative. What the merchants can do is simply to refuse to deal with those who supply adulterated indigo. If there were no demand, there would be no supply.

An interesting ceremony took place at the India Office on November the 30th, when Sir Henry Ponsonby, on behalf of the Queen and Viscount Cross, received Sheik Hassoum Bin Jaffar, Master of the Horse to the Sultan of Muscat, and showed him the presents which Her Majesty is sending to the Sultan. These consisted of a sword of honour, the compliment of which present his Highness will understand and appreciate, a very handsome gold repeater and chain, several guns, and watches for his sons. The ladies of the Harem were also remembered—a large hall clock and costly tea service being the gifts set apart for them. The Sheik himself was presented with a very hundsome gold watch, chain, and compass, and appeared highly pleased with his reception. The Rev. Dr. Anton Tien, who has been requested by the India Office to attend in the suite of the Sheik during his stay in England, acted as interpreter.

India Council Remittances.—On Wednesday last the India Council offered twenty lacs of bills and transfers on India, and, for the fourth time this financial year, it was thought advisable not to make any allotment. It had been thought possible that in the depressed state of the market no application might be sent in; but we understand that one or two tenders were made at very low prices. The effect of the non-allotment, though naturally of a hardening tendency, was somewhat of a negative nature, seeing that rates were to some extent depressed by the fact that some large lines of Indian Railway transfers were offering in competition with the India Council. Much secrecy has been observed, and some remarkably contradictory statements have been put forward as regards the disposal of these railway transfers. It is difficult, therefore, to say exactly what has taken place, but we are given to understand that they have now all been disposed of, and that the balance was recently placed at the lowest point touched during the recent fall. The action of the bullion brokers as regards silver, to which we refer below, and the report that no more railway bills were likely to come upon the market, have since combined to strengthen the exchange market, and, although no marked improvement in rates from India was reported, the feeling here was decidedly more favourable. This week twenty lacs will again be offered for tender. From April 1st to November 30th inclusive the Council had granted remittances for Rs. 8,29,55,050, realising £5,922,995. To the corresponding date last year Rs. 6,38,40,359, realising £4,931,772, had been disposed of.—Statist.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

CALCUTTA, Dec 5.

The Viceroy left Hyderabad on Sunday. Shortly before his departure he received the Nizam at a private interview. What passed has not transpired, but it is probably safe to conjecture that the estrangement between the Nizam and the Prime Minister formed the principal subject of conversation, and I have reason to believe that Lord Dufferin succeeded in putting their relations on a better footing. The next stage in the Viceregal progress was the city of Mysore, which was reached on Tuesday morning. The two days spent there were occupied in a series of pageants and banquets, in receiving and replying to addresses, and in other incidents similar to those which marked the earlier portion of the incidents similar to those which marked the earlier portion of the tour. At the banquet given by the Resident on Tuesday evening the Maharajah pro; osed the Viceroy's health. Lord Dufferin, in replying, congratulated the Maharajah on the condition of Mysore, saying that no Native State had more fully justified the policy of the British Government in snpplementing its own direct administration by the associated rule of the great feudatory princes. He had now visited most of the Native States and met their chiefs, and he had no hesitation in saying that although there might be differences between them, yet on the whole his experiences were highly satisfactory and reassuring. He concluded by thanking the Maharajah for his reference to Lady Dufferin's efforts on behalf of Indian women.

The party left Mysore on Thursday morning and arrived at

The party left Mysore on Thursday morning and arrived at Bangalore the same evening. The principal event there was a great review of British troops on Friday. The journey is to be resumed this morning. Trichinopoly, Madura, Tanjore, and Pondicherry will be visited this week, and the Viceroy will embark at Madras for Calcutte on Saturday.

Madras for Calcutta on Saturday.

Sir M. Grant Duff, speaking at a farewell banquet given by the Maharajah of Vizanagram on Wednesday, said Mr. Bourke would begin his reign under the most agreeable auspicie. The new financial contract between the Supreme and Provincial Governments was nearly settled, and he did not think the province would have much reason to complain. The season was likely to be comirable if only a few more showers fell before the end of the admirable if only a few more showers fell before the end of the year. The Provincial treasury was very full, and Mr. Bourke would have a great deal of money to spend.

Mr. Bourke is expected to reach Madras to morrow. Sir M. Grant Duff leaves Bombay on Friday.

Last Tuesday the Scotchmen of Bombay celebrated the festival of St. Andrew by a dinner. Lord Reay presided, and among the guests were Lord Rosebery and the Duke of Manchester. Lord Rosebery, in replying to the toast of "Our Guests," said he had been in India about sufficient time to write a book—that was light down. There were come for the control of India which was all and the control of India which was eight days. There were some features of India which recalled their country to adventurous Scotchmen. Thus he was told that if you asked a question of a Native you were apt to be answered with those generalisations which were full without being communicative, and which distinguished a reply in his own beloved country. Then, again, bagpipes found admirers in Hindostan as in Scotland. Another point which struck the travelling Scotchman on landing in In in was that he found toddy, although he man on landing in In iia was that he found toddy, although he believed the Indian toddy was a harmless beverage compared to the more sterling compound to which it was said Scotchmen owed so many heroic qualities. He might be allowed to say that Scotchmen feit especial pride and interest in India, because they believed, rightly or wrongly, that to their lace had been given a glorious and disproportionate part not merely in gaining but in maintaining that Empire, and because there was hardly a single home in Scotland which was not represented in India. He hoped and believed that the memory of Plassey, and the other great victories which enabled us to gain India would enable us to continue to mingle the tradition of English justice and strength with Scotch justice and strength—that justice within and strength without, which should characterise an Empire such as the world had never seen. We should require all the traditions of character and courage of our country in these days of strife and international complications to maintain it as we inherited it.

Last August the Calcutta Trades' Association, in addressing the Government on the subject of fluctuations in exchange, suggested certain changes in the system of offering Council bills for sale in London. The Secretary of State's reply is now published. He says that the present system is the result of repeated discussion and frequent modification, and he believes it works satisfactorily to both buyer and seller. The amount of bills offered weekly must be regulated primarily by the necessities of the home Government, but consideration is always given as far as possible to the condition of the Indian market, and as a rule the amount to the condition of the Indian market, and as a rule the amount of bills offered when trade is active is much larger than in the dull season. Intermediate allotments of bills or telegraphic transfers are only made when bidders come forward, and the price is fixed as a rule higher and never lower than that obtained by public tender on the previous Wednesday. The despatch goes on to say that, as the commodity which the Secretary of State offers in London is really nothing else than silver c in deliverable in India, it is difficult to see how competition with other sellers of silver can be avoided, as freight and mint charges constitute the only difference.

The Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Povinces has published an order on the subject of the recent Mohurrum riots at Etawah. He finds the district authorities in no way to blame. The magistrate displayed resolution in facing the crowd, while nothing is imputed to the police beyond not unnatural hesitation and faintheartedness. The conduct of Captaia Veasey and Lieutenant Scales, who commanded troops, and that of Mr. Jones, the station-master, is highly commended.

TIBET.

CALCUTTA, DEC. 5.

The Calcutta Englishman states that two parties of Chinese raders, members of large firms established in China and Singapore, have arrived at Darjeeling. They were sent by their principals to inquire into the prospects of trade with Tibet. They brought a number of boxes containing samples of produce likely to be in demand in Tibet, and were authorised, if the outlook appeared sufficiently promising, to open agencies at Darjeeling.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL F. F. W. COMYN, S.C., Second-in-Command 4th Bombay Infantry (Officiating Commandant 22nd Bombay Infantry) has been granted leave out of India for one year or twelve months.

A BRITISH CRITIC ON INDIAN RIOTS. (Pioneer.)

As a rule the leading articles devoted by London papers to Indian affairs do not handle the problems concerned in a very commanding way. The London leading article, in fact, is, for the most part, a formal product, the art of which is almost wholly employed in disguising the limitations of the writer's knowledge. A little improvement in type-setting machinery ought to supply some of the great metropolitan journals with apparatus that would enable them to dispense with writers altogether. But these reflections do not apply to the essay that has suggested them—a leader in the Times of October 11th on the religious riots at Delhi. Singularly enough this article has another claim on attention, because it would appear to be from a sentence or two at the end [of it that Reuter gathered the statement that the Times had pronounced against the admission of Natives to the Civil Service, and for the administration of the country on British principles. Turning to the Times to see on what grounds it had thus gone counter to the Public Service Commission, we find merely some reflections called up by the rioting of the late Mohurum. The remarks put forward all rest on very strong good sense; and it would be pleasant to think that the views thus expressed were generally diffused at home. Unfortunately it is to be feared that they represent some well-qualified expert employed by the Times to write the particular article before us rather than insight into the true relations of Government, people and rival sects in India, diffused over a wide area.

A natural comparison is suggested at the outset between the riots at Delhi and Etawah and those at Belfast. The ferocity of the Catholic and Protestant strife has far eclipsed that of the Mahomedans and Hindus. The fact "does not shed much lustre either upon Western religion or Western civilisation," but the Eastern religious animosities are at all events, fierce enough to li. ht up much worsedisturbances than any that have raged for many years, if it were not for the "strong and equal rule" of the British of the British and the strong and equal rule of the strong ana Government that saves the country from becoming once more" the battle-field of races and creeds." The fact that we keep all tendencies of that kind under repression, coupled with the developtendencies of that kind under repression, coupled with the development of prosperity that naturally grows up during an era of internal peace, "is the main justification of our presence" in India. And this state of things must not be ignored, though thoughtless enthusiasts constantly put it aside whenever proposals are on foot for leading forward the people of India into the paths of self-government. We can give the people of India self-government "by clearing out the country and allowing them all to do as they please; but we cannot do it by staying there to maintain the distinctive benefits of our occupation, while declining the responsibility of enforcing principles on which they depend. While we, and we alone prevent India from being plunged into a mad struggle among diverse races and creeds for ascendency, the and struggle among diverse races and creeds for ascendency, the Government of It dia must in all essentials be carried on upon English, not Native, principles, and by English, not Native, administrators." This passage may not cover the whole ground. It may not recognise all the possibilities of progress in various directions that reside in the future, but at all events it expresses a profound truth as regards the existing conditions of solitons. a profound truth as regards the existing conditions of society in India, and nothing in Indian politics is more deplorable and dis-tressing than the fact that Native Indian writers on the various agitations of the hour will not keep their recommendations and proposals in harmony with that fundamental necessity of the situation. The representatives in the Press of that which claims -perhaps not unreasonably--to be the most intellectual and polished race in India are especially to blame for sinning against this immutable consideration, and if a good deal of language directed against them in consequence is more pungent than polite, they cannot be held blameless as regards its provocation while they cannot be held blameless as regards to provide they thus refuse to pay any attention to a feature in the politics they thus refuse all another to keep in sight. This is of India which they, above all, ought to keep in sight. This is how the Times, in the article before us, takes notice of this point:
—"It is perhaps what the cynical student of human nature would expect, that it is the stronger races who most heartily acquiesce in our rule, and that agitation and sedition are almost the monopoly of races which owe it absolutely to the English Government that they are not now, as they were for generations, the helpless and spiritless victims of successive conquerors."

It seems tolerably certain that before long a great many questions connected with the administration of India, among them all those irritating questions which have to do with the ambition of Native aspirants for public authority, will be under more or less confused discussion before a great Parliamentary Committee. Inquiries going on here under better guarantees that all views of the subject may be properly taken into account, can only be preparatory to those which must precede any legislative proposals at home. And when all the one-sided, passionate or interested parties of the most extreme Native claims are shouting their loudest, the calm, good sense of the view now finding expression in the Times will run serious risk of being forgotten. It is all the more the duty, therefore, of public writers out here to keep it as much as possible in mind. As regards public writers of Indian nationality, we might say it is their duty to keep it as much as possible before their conscience. Until the population of India at large has advanced distinctly beyond its present place in social evolution, "the government of India must be carried on on English, not Native, principles; by English, not Native, administrators." Not to speak of grave political complications that might arise at some other period, how is a Native Magistrate in high authority, who, by the hypothesis must be himself either a Hindu or a Mahomedan, to keep the ever-recurring religious rivalries of the two great sects in check? It is the religious neutrality of the British officer that gives him the immense advantage he possesses as a guardian of public order. Intellectual qualifications have nothing to do with the matter relatively. A Bengali District Magistrate might be able to apply the keenest wit to a cri is of the kind we are contemplating, but he would be a firebrand in such an emergency instead of a guardian of order. He would cast oil on the flames of Mahomedan excitement even by doing the very same thing which a British Magistrate, beyond the suspicion of partiality in such a matter, might do with the most tranquillising effect.

LINKED BATTALIONS. (Madras Mail.)

The scheme of linking together the single Battalion Regiments of the Bengal Infantry and Punjab Frontier Force will, doubtless, be soon put into force in the same manner in the two Minor Presidencies. The details of a similar measure were long agoelaborated for the Madras Presidency, whereby the Madras Infantry, instead of consisting of thirty-two single Battalion Regiments, as at present, was to be organised in ten Line Regiments of three battalions each and one Pioneer Regiment of two-battalions. For the present, the numbers and regimental designations of the regiments are not to be changed; but if the new system is to be carried out to any good purpose, the consolidation of the link d battalions into one regiment can only be a question of time. The old custom of the British, and, indeed, of all European nations since the introduction of standing armies, was to keep up single battalion regiments, to which fresh battalions were added on war breaking out. During the Peninsular War, most of our British Infantry Regiments had three battalions: the Sapoy Infantry of our Indian Army had two battalions to each regiment, and until the Mutiny the Bengal Infantry retained among the Native's Idiery the titles of "right" or "left battalion" of the regiment of Gillis, or Kaye, as the case might be: It was the same in Madras; the 28th Madras Infantry is still known among old pensioners as the "First Martin," while the 39th Regiment was the "Second Martinka pultun." But after the reduction of the army which followed Waterloo, the usual course was adopted of disbanding all the second and third bat: alions of the Regiments of foot, and in 1824, partly to assimilate the Indian to the British Army, and partly to accelerate the rate of promotion of the European officers of the East India. Company's Service, each Sepoy battalion of Infantry was constituted a separate regiment. A return is now being made to the old system, which was unwisely then discontinued.

All the great Continental armies have their Infantry now organised in regiments of three or four battalions, but most commonly the latter. Four companies to a battalion, and five battalions to a regiment is the model establishment, though the Prussians, who never change anything in their military system unless some great and manifest advantage is to be reaped thereby, adhere to their organisation in three battalions. The great-advantages of this system are simplicity and cheapness. The regiment is the administrative unit, and when there are hundreds of thousands of men to be equipped, drilled, and disciplined, it is obviously an advantage to have the administrative unit as large as possible. A War office has only eighty colonels to deal instead of 320. Cheapness is attained by having only one colonel and one quartermaster to a regiment of 4,000 men, with a corresponding reduction in all the regimental establishments, instead of keeping up a separate establishment for every 1,000 men. The whole regiment being a homogeneous mass, the reductions of a fourth battalion, or the formation of a fifth, is effected with very little trouble or expense. In the first instance the remaining three battalions soon absorb the personnel of the fourth; in the latter, the battalion is formed by a slight decrease in the numbers of the other battalions to form its nucleus, while the officers and staff are all ready to hand. The chief merit of the treble, or quadruple battalion system lies, however, in its application to war, which, after all, is the real raison d'être of all military organisation. Directly a Continental regiment of infantry is mobilised for war it forms a fifth battalion, by transferring its recruits, all men not immediately fit for active service, and all its permanent impedimenta from the service battalions. The fifth battalion thenceforth acts as a depot and training-ground, despatches a constant stream of recruits to reinforce the ranks of the battalions in the field, and receives all the sick and wounded men se by the reserve men being called into the ranks on mobilisation. We could not form depot battalions if a war broke out; on the contrary, we should have to break up some of our existing battalions to fill up the ranks of those ordered to the front. The present scheme makes the men and officers of three linked battalions interchangeable, with a view to one of them becoming a depot battalion for the other two when the latter are on a campaign. This is at all events a stop in the right direction, for a battalion on service may easily become so attenuated as to be useless as a tactical unit, unless it bas a sufficient supply of trained men to fill up the gaps in its ranks. It is also probably a step towards the establishment of a territorial system of recruitment in India adapted to the political and geographical divisions of the country, which would, probably, tend to greatly populatise the service among Her Majesty's Indian subjects.

RAILWAY OBSTRUCTIVES AT THE INDIA OFFICE. (Bombay Gazette.)

We are sorry to learn that the report to which an up-country paper lately gave currency that the Nagpur Bengal Railway was about to be taken in hand is much too good news to be true. Not even Lord Kimberley's departure from the India Office has sufficed to bring the project nearer accomplishment than it has been ever since a clique in the Secretary of State's Council began to offer an inveterate obstruction to it. Lord Cross, who is usually an independent if not always a strong administrator, has not succeeded in overcoming it, more, we suspect, because he has not tried than because having tried he has found that the obstinacy of the metre gauge clique cannot be overcome by the rightful exercise of the Secretary of State's authority over a presumptuous faction in his own Council. The whole question stands where it did, though there has been just as much variation in the mode of opposition as will free the opponents of the project from the charge of inert stubbornness. The latest device for putting a spoke in the wheel of the Government of India is to advocate that the scheme should be cut down to one for a line from the terminus of the Nagpur-Chattisgarh Railway to Bilaspur; in other words, to reduce the project to about a fifth of its original proportions. In addition to this—and here the real purpose of the device reveals itself—it has been proposed that the new section shall be laid on the metre gauge, its conversion into broad gauge being received for metre gauge, its conversion into broad gauge being reserved for the time when it may make good carnings, and when it may be deemed advisable to complete the line on its original dimensions If there is any serious purpose whatever in this proposal it is that a plausible argument may be provided hereafter for laying down the whole line on the narrow gauge. In this manner is the battle of the gauges continued at the India Office, long after it has been fought out before the Government of India and before Parliamentary Committees. There is no need to ask if this is a straightforward proceeding on the part of those who resort to it. People will not think the better of it because it is undertaken on the pretence that in the present state of exchange so large an expenditure as that which is scheduled cannot be embarked upon expenditure as that which is scheduled cannot be embarked upon without detriment to our financial position. Such, indeed, is the excuse which the obstructives have put forward, with small regard for its relevancy, or for any other consideration apparently than how best to restore the credit of their own discarded notions concerning gauge. The marvel is that the attachment of one or two retired servants of the Government of India to the narrow gauge should be so powerful for mischief. Greater marvel still is it that the judgment of the Government of India, the advice of a select committee of the House of Commons, and the undivided voice of the commercial public in this country should be set at voice of the commercial public in this country should be set at naught by the obstinacy of a clique not too large to find accommodation in a hansom cab. Lord Cross is new to his work at the India Office, but there is enough in his antecedents at the Home Office to warrant the belief that he cannot long look with indifference upon this stubborn defiance of the highest and the best informed judgment that is available. The greater Chambers of Commerce of India have urged the early prosecution of the project as one eminently conducive to the prosperity of the country. The Government have recommended it even more earnestly as a scheme which will bring every district in India that is liable to famine in direct communication with "the land of threshing floors" the most productive grain growing region in India. Capitalists —the most productive grain growing region in India. Capitalists have stood at the door of the India Office until they are weary, offering to raise the money on terms which to men of business at least as shrewd as those who conduct the financial operations of the office seem safe and advantageous to the Government. Lord Randolph Churchill, despairing of being able to break down the solid wall of otstruction in the House of Commons, is casting about him for a battering ram wherewith to make an open way for legislation. Where is the battering ram which will serve for the solid wall of India Office stubbornness ?

MISSIONS TO TIBET. (Times of India.)

If it be true that Mr. Carey, of the Bengal Civil Service, has succeeded in exploring the religion of Lob Nor in company with Mr. Dalgleish, the Yarkhand traveller, there may still be reason for hoping that at no distant period some Englishman will be permitted to reach Libasa. The North China Herald is probably correct in ascribing the refusal of the Tibetan authorities to a'low Mr. Macaulay's mission to proceed, to the fuss and parade that was made in the matter, and to the largeness of the escort and number of followers. It will be observed that this opinion of our Anglo-Chinese contemporary exactly coincides with the statement of the most recent traveller, namely, that the Tibetan Lamas cannot understand why a numerous mission is necessary. But, however this may be, when the future pioneer of trade and commerce has succeeded in reaching Libasa and makes known to the world his impressions of the sacred city, it will be interesting to learn whether these coincide with, or rather reconcile, the varying accounts of the few Europeans who have ever been therebefore? Manning, probably the only one of our countrymen who has entered Libasa, and was of too lively and impetuous a disposition to appreciate its lonely isolation, said the city was dreamy and ghostly, and that it had nothings triking or pleasing in its appearance, that its habitations were begrimed with smut and dirt, its streets swarming with filthy dogs, some growling and gnawing bits of hide which lay about in profusion, and emitted a charnel-house smell, that other dogs were limping and "looking livid," some ulcerated, others starved and dying and peeked at by the ravens. In short, everything seemed mean and gloomy, and unreal. Even the mirth and laughter of the inhabitants was dreamy and ghostly. Some thirty years after Manning's residence, MM. Huc and Gabet entered the city, and Huc's account thereof in 1846 is much pleasanter, for he found the houses large and freshly-painted or whitowashed, although within, the dwellings were filthy in the extreme, cleanliness not being a characteristic either of Tibetan or a Tartar. The entrance to these dwellings was by long ladders and there were no chimneys, the upper rooms having openings in the

A few miles from the city there are three great Lumaserais or monasteries, each of which, it is said, has 15,000 lamas attached to it, and these holy people deem it a point of duty to make the pilgrimage to the holy Morow convent once a year in order to receive there the benediction or the Dalai Luma for the ensuing twelve months. One of the consequences of this flocking together of churchmen is, that all kinds of feuds and jealousies break out among the inmates of the different monasteries, and that instead of a pilgrimage of grace, their journey is often a scene of violent dissension. Lhasa lies in the valley of the Tsanpu or Brahmaputra, which is there a wide and lively stream. Houses and cultivated fields are numerous; there is a fair growth of timber, and altogether this district would appear to be the most pleasant in all Tibet. The head of the vast hierarchy and temporal sovereign of Tibet is the Dalai Luma, who holds his court in Lhasa, acknowledging fealty to the Chinese Government who maintain a division of troops in the land, have a plecipotentiary there, and exercise a great, if not paramount, influence in politics and government. Of equal spiritual authority and sanctity to the Dalai is the Tesha Luma, whose palace is at Tshu Lumba. The third member of this Patriarchate is the Kutukhta of Urga in Mongolis, who, as Colonel Yule puts it, is the most powerful and revered of all the Luma hierarchy, after the Dalai and Teshu Lumas. According to Luma doctrine, these holy men are the terrestrial impersonation of the Godhead and never die, being renewed by death. At the moment of dissolution their souls pass into the bodies of newly-born boys, for whom search is made in accordance with the dying Luma's directions. There are other the Grand Lumas. Of the intellectual capacity of the Mongolian hierarchy, Colonel Prejevalsky, the modern Russian traveller, gives a very disparaging estimate.

It should be noticed, in reference to this statement, that the three Englishmen who in times gone by had actual personal intercourse with the Grand Lamas of Tibet, left on record the testimony of their high admiration of the abilities, the meekness and the virtues of the "Two Jewels of Tibet," evidence all the more valuable from the fact that the witnesses were unconnected and independent. Thus Bogle, the able emissary of Warren Hastings, after dilating on the courtesy and charming manners of the Teshu Lama of 1774, testifies to his abilities, and says, "although venerated as God's Vicegerent through all the eastern countries of Asia, endowed with a portion of omniscience, and endowed with many other divine attributes, he throws aside, in conversation, all the awful part of his character, and accommodates himself to the weakness of mortals. He is extremely merry and entertaining in conversation, and tells a pleasant story with a great deal of humour and action. I endeavoured to find out in his character those defects which are inseparable from humanity, but he is so universally beloved that I had no success, and not a man could find it in his heart to speak ill of him." It was with a heavy heart that Bogle finally took leave of his Holiness and of Tibetans and wrote down: "Farewell ye honest and simple people. May ye long enjoy that happiness which is denied to more polished nations, and while they are engaged in the endless pursuits of avarice and ambition, defended by your barren mountains, may ye continue to live in peace and contentment, and know no wants but those of nature." The next envoy to Tibet, Captain Turner, a hard-headed young officer of exceptional ability, tells us of the veneration in which this Teshu Lama's memory was held, and gives an extraordinary account of his own interview with the new incarnation, a beautiful infant of eighteen months. Having been informed that this princely child, though not able to speak, could fully comprehend what was said to him, Captain Turner made a speech in which flowery compliments and politics were judiciously blended. The boy looked steadily at the British envoy with the appearance of much attention and nodded with repeated but slow motions of the head as though he understood every word. He was silent and sedate, his whole attention being directed to the envoy, who was astonished at his dignity and decorum. When Manning was in Lhasa in 1811, the then Dalai Luma was a boy of seven, "a well educated child with a face poetically and affectingly beautiful." This youthful Pope was of a gay and cheerful nature, and Manning, who says, "I could have wept through strangeness of sensation," was sorry to part with his Holiness. The curious fascination exercised by these successors of the Lord Buddha over men thus associated with them, extended in the case of Mr. Hodgson, even to the written intercourse he had with the Da

BENGAL.

The Vagaries of Babu.—A petition has been presented to the authorities in Bengal against Babu Juggobundho Khan, Deputy Magistrate of Dukhin, Shahpur. The charges against the man were—(1) That he tried cases till 10 or 11 P.M., and sometimes till 1 A.M., and then falsified the register of attendance so as to show that he had never sat later than 7.40 P.M.; (2) That he did not give notice of his movements while on tour, and that, in consequence, several cases were struck of his file in default of the appearance of the parties; (3) That he used boats and carts without paying for them; (4) That he had women connected with cases before him taken to his house for immoral purposes. The Commissioner held that the first charge had been clearly proved, and that the fourth charge had been made out to a great extent. The Licutenant-Governor was of opinion that these charges, particularly the last, were of so serious a nature that, if they were true, the Deputy Magistrate, who had once before been suspended from office for an abuse of his authority, could no longer be retained in the service of Government. Sir Rivers Thompson was not, however, prepared to take such an extreme step as to remove from his appointment an officer in Government service upon a mere departmental inquiry in which the witnesses were not sworn to their statements, and the defence set up was that the charges had been fabricated by the Deputy Magistrate's enemies. The Lieutenant-Governor accordingly directed that a formal and public inquiry into the truth of these two charges should be held under the provisions of Act 37, of 1850, and that, pending such inquiry, Babu Juggobundho Khan should be suspended from office. The inquiry was held accordingly, and a report of the proceedings submitted to Government, and the Deputy Magistrate, who has been under suspension for several months, has been placed uader further suspension for several months, has been placed on record that Babu Juggobundho Khan shall never further suspension from office and pay for one year. It is also to be placed on record that Babu Juggobundho Khan shall never be again employed in any independent charge, and that the proceedings taken against him on this occasion be noted against him for consideration when promotions in the Bengal Subordinate Executive Service are under consideration.

THE BRAHMO SOMAJ.—A Benga'i paper thus brings to notice an interesting fact in the history of the Brahmo Somaj:—"The family of the late Brahmo leader have at last seen fit to surrender their private possession of the church of the Somaj in Machooabazar-street, Calcutta, together with the land and buildings, paid for by public subscription. A deed has been executed by Babu Karuna Chunder Sen eldest son of Keshub Chunder Sen, vecting the property and Mandir in three persons appointed two years ago by the Governing Committee of the Brahmo Somaj of India; Babus Krishna Behari Sen, Amrita Lal Bose, and Gour Govind Roy.

They will hold in trust for the sect, or rather the particular section of it. The trust-deed seems to be a careful document which gives a constitution to the Brahmo temple by which, while the trustees have charge of the property, the religious rites and duties will be discharged and controlled by the governing body of the Somaj with the queer designation of the 'Apostolic Durbar.' The trust-deed was executed and registered on Tuesday, the 9th ult. We do not know how far this deed will meet all the requirements of the Progressive Brahmos. From what we have observed of these Hindu reformers, we can scarcely hope that it will end all differences among the section of the sects who look up to the Mandir as their chief place of worship. It is also a question how far, unless there is a will of his father in his favour, the action of Keshub Babu's eldest son is binding on the other heirs. But we suppose it is all right. Considering the attitude hitherto maintained by the representatives of the late Minister, this deed is a great step in moderation. The public will not, we believe, be wrong in crediting it to the wiser counsel of Babu Krishna Behari Sen, younger brother of Keshub Chunder."

A LADIES' RIFLE MATCH.—There were rifle shooting matches at Bangalore a few days ago, and among other events there was a Diana Plate, which was won by Mrs. Barker with the excellent score of 34, her shots being as follows:—5, 4, 5, 5, 5, 5, 5=34. Mrs, Westlake and Mrs. Symonds made a tie for second place with 33 points—a tie that is somewhat remarkable, as the value of their respective shots was precisely the same—that is, they came in exact order, as follows:—Mrs. Westlake, 4, 5, 5, 4, 5, 5, 5; Mrs. Symonds, 4, 5, 5, 4, 5, 5, 5.

Abouthion of Jails.—The Madras Government have resolved to abolish the district jails of Rajamundry, Trichinopoly, and Chittor. Endeavours will be made to find opportunities of reemploying such of the employés as are fit for service. As regards Rajamundry, all prisoners, including civil debtors, and undertrial prisoners, will be transferred to the Central Jail. In consequence of the abolition of the Trichinopoly District Jail, the further construction of the new district jail buildings that had been sanctioned will be finally abandoned, with the exception of one block partly constructed, which will be completed and used for the accommodation of short-term prisoners. In respect to the Chittor Jail, the Inspector-General of Jails has suggested to death.

THE Governor, on behalf of Government, has expressed to the public of Madras his hearty concurrence in the Prince of Wales's suggestion of the establishment of an Imperial Institute. Nine local influential gentlemen have been invited to form a committee to collect subscriptions.

CAPTAIN TAYLOR, Master Attendant here, is permitted by the Government of India, at the earnest request of the Madras Government, an extension of service so as to qualify for pension.

The hurricane which passed over Madras on November 9 was one of the most severe of recent years. Large trees were blown down in all parts of the city. Many streets and roads have been rendered impassable. Roofs have been damaged, sign boards and window shutters torn down, and considerable damage done to property everywhere. The Royal Standard floating in honour of the Prince of Wales's birthday was torn into shreds. The roadway by the pier was washed away. The river Cooum overflowed, and many parts of the town were under water. The Agri-Horticultural Gardens sustained serious damage.

THE GAERWAR'S JEWELS.—When the Viceroy visited Baroda one of the sights provided for his Excellency was the inspection of the Gaekwar's State jewels. The extraordinary wealth of that chief may be imagined when, amongst his precious adoruments, one large diamond is valued at £90,000 sterling, and a diamond necklace at £250,000, while the whole display is estimated to be worth upwards of four millions sterling.

THE BOMBAY UNIVERSITY.—One Bomtay paper told us the other day of extraordinary precautions to prevent the question papers for the pending University Examinations from becoming pematurely known. Now another Bombay paper—the Advocate of India-states:—"A correspondent, who gives his name and address, informs us that the question papers for the first BA. Examination, recently completed, have been previously in circulation among some of the candidates. What truth there may be in the statement we do not know.

EXTRAVAGANT AHMEDABAD.—The Times of India says:—"The good people of Ahmedabad—citizens of no mean city—are scarcely to be congratulated on the style in which they received Lord Dufferin. It was, as they told him in their Municipal Address, "the first occasion on which Ahmedabad received a Viceroy and Govornor-General of India within its precincts," and they signalled this important event by spending, if we may trust the Guirat Mitra, the munificent sum of Rs.150 in decorations and rejoicings. Fortunately the officers of the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway had truerideas of the dignity of the occasion. In default of municipal help they decorated and illuminated the railway station at which Lord Dufferin was formally welcomed to Guzerat in a very effective manner, and the ceremony of his reception was at once picturesque and impressive. Outside the station precincts there were no signs of popular welcome except two or three shabby arches."

COAL IN THE DECCAN.—An expert in coal-mining has recently visited the Singarenni Coal Fields, and reports that the mineral is of as good a class as can be procured in India, far excelling the Central Provinces coal. It is a good locomotive coal, and the small or slack will no doubt make a first class smithy coal. Some of it will also "coke," but it is believed that the expense that would be incurred in picking out this "special" matter would not pay the Company. "Mr. Molesworth," says the Deccan Times, "deserves great credit for the energy and skill he has shown in opening out an old shaft that had been sunk twelve years ago, out of which he is at present drawing about ten tons a day. He has also started sinking an eighteen feet shaft, three-quart is of a mile from the old one in a north-westerly direction where the coal promises to be thicker, at a lower depth. A ventilating shaft which will also act as an incline for men to get out of No. I shaft has been put in hand. Every effort is being made to prove the 'field' a good and lucrative concern. Evidently Messrs. Watson and Stewart have made a very happy selection in Mr. Molesworth. The mine will, in six months' time, produce forty tons per day. We may also remark that the expert saw stacks of large and slack coal which are reported to have been cut some twelve years back. These have shown no sigus of firing. The large is being used in the portable engine at work at the mine, and it gives a good, clear fire, no clinker, and little or no ash. The slack for smithy purposes, the foreman in charge pronounces, is fitted to heat and weld iron almost as well as English coal. It is, indeed, a matter for sincere congratulation that so material an aid to the development of the country should now be opened out almost at our very doors."

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

The appointment of Military Secretary to the Government of the Punjab will be abolished, with effect from the 1st December, and the office establishment will be transferred to the Punjab Civil Secretariat.

THE Englishman hears that the subordinate staff of the North-Western Railway are going about in rags and tatters, pending the elaboration of a semi-military uniform by the Manager, Colonel Conway-Gordon.

THE Lahore paper states that fever is still very prevalent in Rawal Pindi, though not attended by any fatal results. There is a great deal of fever also in Meean Meer, the average number of men in hospital from this ailment having, in one regiment, multiplied tenfold—risen, that is, from six to sixty.

THE SIMLA ASSAULT CASE.—The Simla paper says that the ruffian who assaulted Mrs. Adams near Elysium was recently put on his trial before the Assistant Commissioner. He tried to prove that he was not the party who committed the assault, but one of his comrades, who cannot be found. The case has been adjourned to allow the defence to obtain the services of a pleader.

A LIBERAL OFFER.—Mr. Hinks, of the celebrated firm of lamp suppliers, Messrs. James Hinks and Sons, when passing through Cawnpore a day or two ago, noticed that the lamps in the Memorial Church, although fitted with Hink's burners, were on a very old principle. He was good enough to offer to relight the whole of the chancel with fifteen thirty-candle power lamps of the newest kind, to be supplied free of cost.

THE INDIAN SANITARY REPORT.

The eighteenth Report on Sanitary Measures in India, for the year 1884-5, which is prepared by Mr. Ronson, of the India Office, has just been published, and it contains, as usual, a vast amount of interesting information relating to the health of the whole Indian community, European and Native. The arrangement is appropriate, and based on a recognition of facts which places in the front the health of the European garrison of India. England is generally reproached with the smallness of her army. Enrevanche we can say that there is no other nation which could keep one-third of its army permanently engaged on foreign service. It necessarily follows that the health of our soldiers in India, which absorbs three-fourths of our external garrisons, is a matter of national importance. The responsibility is not evaded. In India an Army Sanitary Commission has been appointed for the express purpose of discharging this duty, and its action has been marked by vigilance and discrimination. The returns of sickness and mortality, which were exceptionally factorable in 1883-4, are less satisfactory for the period under notice, except in the Presidency of Madras, where the death-rate continued to decline from 10·19 per thousand to 8·53. In Bengal there was a fractional increase, but on the other hand, the mortality of the troops in Bombay rose from 10·50 to 19·39. The unsatisfactory results were therefore confined to the last-named presidency, and they are explained as "chiefly due to the high cholera death-rate among the troops serving in Southern Afghanistan." The death-rate for the whole of India is 12.56 per thousand, as against 10.88 the previous year. In connection with this increase it should be recollected that the rate for the period 1870-9 was an average of 30 per thousand, and that in the older days it was as high as 70. The prevalence of each disease is discussed under different subheads, and with regard to venereal diseases, which continue to increase, the Commission state despondingly that "the whole subject appears to be surrounded with insurmountable difficulties, for in every government the disease has advanced, in the face of every means of prevention which have been adopted." There is reason to believe that the real remedy lies with the home authorities, who, by an alteration in the existing system of examination of outgoing regiments, can do much to assist the efforts of the Indian Sanitary Commission. One other fact relating to the English army is brought out in this report, and that is the increase of invaliding among the young troops—men under 25 and of from two to five years of Indian service.

The returns for the Native army are altogether more favourable. The hospital entries show an increase of slight ailments, but the death-rate fell from 11.76 to 10.50. With regard to the civil population the registration of vital statistics is reported to make but slow progress. Even in Bengal the registration of births is confined to selected towns, but considerable progress is being made with the registration of deaths. Epidemics are still the most formidable scourges, and of the deaths reported more than three-fifths are caused by fevers. On this subject the Commission report that, "if the villages are improved as they ought to be, the fatality of fever will become less year after year, but the amount of fever is connected with the subsoil water, which, in its turn, is dependent on the drainage outlets, and it will continue pretty much as it is until they, too, are made efficient." A satisfactory growth of civil hospitals and dispensaries is recorded, and every year shows a larger percentage of applications as compared with the population. This means the relief, temporary or permanent, of much human suffering.

A SPORTSMAN'S LAMENT.

THE UMBALLA MILITARY AND HUNT MEETING. (December 16th and 18th.)

N.B.—The Steeplechase Course has been altered and made-easier.

The ditches are filled up, and all the rails removed.

The fences are well sloped and bushed, and are well littered on the landing sides.

Get a nervous lady's pony—get the oldest you can find— Strap an ulster on the pommel—tie a bedding-roll behind: To a Hanoverian Pelham hitch a standing martingale— Then hang upon his jaws, my son, and listen to my tale.

Many ages since, my infant, we were green as Dehra grass, Though we lacked the shining silver we were millionaires in brass; And we gathered at Umballa when the "seventies" were low, And we rode like Helen Blazes in the days of long ago.

Those were times when life went swiftly both for rider and for horse—

When we sampled with our clavicles the texture of the course; For the Stewards built the fences up to five-foot six or so. And we "pecked" about those ramparts in the days of long ago.

Answer, man of many fractures, William Beresford—Give ear. "Bertie," sweltering in Calcutta, Johnston, Humphreys, Percy Vere.

Did you fill the yawning ditches? Did you lay the railings low, On the old Umballa racecourse in the days of long ago?

Yea, the ditches filled aforetime; but they filled with wrathful men!

Yea, the railings were demolished by a bolter now and then!
More than once the "well-bushed fences" sloped before the staggering blow

Of a puller, gazing skyward, in the days of long ago.

There was litter—lots of litter—spread about the "landing side"

When a blown and basted leader checked his last half-hearted stride,

And the ruck came up behind him—and they made a holy show On the old Umballa racecourse in the days of long ago.

Many ages since, my infant, we were green as Dehra grass; We were guildless as the morning—but we knew what riding was. But a newer generation seem to make the pace more slow Than we made it at Umballa in the days of long ago.

To an iron-bound ring-saddle nail a safety stirrup; then Stitch a four foot sola cushion just across your abdomen. With a length of double stove-pipe guard your neck in case it breaks.

THE FAR INTERIOR.*

Early in the year 1884 a solitary traveller started from Port Early in the year 1884 a solitary traveller started from Port Elizabeth in the hope of journeying through Southern Africa towards Lake Nyanza, a distance of upwards of 1,300 miles. Alone so far as the companionship of white men was concerned, his venturesome task was rendered more venturesome by the circumstance that he was unable to speak a word of any of the native dialects which could stand him in good stead. Entirely dependent upon personal resources he had to seek from the various tribes he encountered alike food for bodily support and guides to lead him on his unknown path.

It was a truly perilous undertaking! Perilous thus to thread this "great thirst land" with no one to counsel, no one to sympathise; perilous to rely for safety upon signs easily to be misinterpreted, and looks most apt to give rise to false impressions; perilous, lastly, to journey for eleven months in a tropical, and at times pestilented, climate, amidst dangers of illness, dangers of accident, dangers of floods, dangers of mao, dangers of nature—dependent not unfrequently—perhaps, indeed, most generally—upon a keen rifle and a steady aim to get daily subsistence for the support of life. Such was the fate of Mr. Montagu Kerr, and as he travels along, at times elate, at others dejected, footsore, as he travels along, at times elate, at others dejected, footsore, weary, yet hopeful—his life hauging by a thread liable to snap at any moment—mighty feelings of pity and pride rise up undeniably in the reader's bosom. Pity that so noble and enterprising an enthusiast should brave dangers so overwhelming, and run risks so fearful; pride that an Englishman should thus "do and dare" all that is possible—aye, well-nigh all that is impossible!

But with the reader, as with the writer, hope is fixed upon the successful reaching of the White Settlement, the goal of the traveller's journey—Livingstonia. But, alas! for the fleeting pleasures of expectation! When Mr. Kerr, after incredible difficulties and superhuman toils, did set foot in the town which was to be to him an Elysium of joy, a Paradise of delight, he roamed through its deserted streets, its desolate homes, its tenantless—hearths—the town was unoccupied. Then, and not till then, did the demon of despair seize the disconsolate wanderer, and he sank down well-nigh heart-broken and desolate.

How, too, was he to escape from his enforced imprisonment?

He had no food, no goods wherewith to barter and get the necessaries of life. It was indeed a crisis in his wanderings, and as day after day he turned his 'steps to the water's edge, hoping against hope that some boat might appear in sight, it may well be imagined that his feelings were down-hearted to a degree which pases description. At length, however, one eventful night his astonished eyes saw the light of a small craft riding upon the ways and as the reseal slowly green up within guesto of the waves, and as the vessel slowly crept up within gunshot of the shore, Mr. Kerr, with all the energy he could muster, shouted aloud "Steamer aboy!" whereupon two men put off in a small boat. He was saved!

Mr. Kerr's escapes were from first to last, indeed, little less than miraculous, and he tells his tale with such modesty and absence of self that his work is sure to find many readers amongst those who can appreciate heroism and admire pluck, who love adventure, and have a keen appreciation of sport.

SEA LIFE SIXTY YEARS AGO.+

Towards the close of the last century the French Government, inspired perhaps by the idea of rivalling the British circumnavigator Cook, fitted out two frigates La Boussole and L'Astrolabe (the Compass and the Quadrant), and gave the command to Comte Jean François Galaup de la Perouse. Accordingly, in 1785, they "set sail with light anticipations of making new and wonderful discoveries, and in due time bringing home a large addition to the stock of information already obtained about the heautiful islands of the Pacific." In 1788 the ships were at Botany Bay, whence they sailed in March of that year; from which time no tidings of them were ever heard. Search was made, rewards were offered, but in vain; and it was not till thirty-eight years had elapsed that all doubt as to their fate was Towards the close of the last century the French Government, thirty-eight years had elapsed that all doubt as to their fate was dispelled. How this happened is the object of Captain Bayly's book to relate.

The author takes the opportunity in narrating the discovery to record the experiences of his seafaring life, and the result is to record the experiences of his seafaring life, and the result is a book which is sure to comman't a goodly array of readers. The volume is full of adventures, some comic, some serious, but all interesting. Moreover, being a record of sea life as it used to be when steam was unknown, and men had to trust to good seamanship for their lives and their safety, there is much food for reflection for the rising generation. Captain Bayly certainly seems to have "roughed" it enough to lend a charm to his experience.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

The coming event of the Queen's Jubilee casts its shadow before it, in the first article of the present number of the National, in the shape of some remarks from the competent pen of Mr. G. Baden-Powell on the objects to be simed at in the Empire Institute designed to commemorate the fiftieth year of our beloved Queen's designed to commemorate the fiftieth year of our beloved Queen's prosperous and beneficent reign. We can have no better definition of the objects to be attained by such an institute than is given by Mr. Powell at p. 442. It "should not be a mere place of amusement, or a mere exchange for purposes of commerce, but an authorised place of instruction" and information, calculated to carry to "full development the opportunities presented by our rapidly-growing Empire."

The very clear article of the Bishop of Sydney on Law rapra-

The very clear article of the Bishop of Sydney on Lay representation in the Anglican Church in Australia, the last of three most interesting papers on the subject of the position of the laity most interesting papers on the subject of the position of the laify in various branches of our Church, shows how far more lay representation is a reality elsewhere than in England; the synods in Australia being (p 448, sqq.) "real and effective governing bodies;" while in them "the laity hold a distinctly co-ordinate position with the clergy." There is much in these valuable essays, which may well be utilised in that strengthening from within of the Church's defences, which impending assaults from without daily render more imperative.

Church's defences, which impending assaults from without daily render more imperative.

A subject which, in the opinion of many people, is closely allied to Church matters, is the marriage law; in other words, the prohibition now existing against marriage with a deceased wife's sister, and with other persons related, not by blood, but by marriage; a prohibition, the retention of which Mr. Percy Greg strongly advocates, but of which the abrogation is probably only a question of a very brief interval. Supported in the Lords on a second division, and after a previous defeat, by the narrowest majority, openly disregarded in all other Protestant lands, our own Colonies included, and, by dispensation, in Romish countries, the longevity of the prohibition in England is not to be reckoned on. be reckoned on.

A very important, though brief, Essay is that by Mr. W. B. Whall on "the Bitish Merchant Service." The writer is Whall on "the B.itish Merchant Service." The writer is eminently qualified, by his experience of twenty-six years' service (partly before the mast), to speak as to the great decrease, not only in proportion to foreigners, but actual, of British seamen. To a nation whose existence is so largely due to its maritime population, it is difficult to conceive anything more appallingly momentous. To be told, at a time when "wars and rumours of wars" are heard from every quarter of the Old World, when Britain has many active enemies, and none but lukewarm friends, that, possibly, "there are only ten per cent. of British seamen at present in the merchant service" is indeed ominous. And it is on the merchant service, be it remembered, that we are to depend for our fast cruisers. Surely, when every other nation which possesses a littoral is straining every nerve to ensure the services, in time of need, of its entire maritime population, our own rulers ought not to be remiss? But we hear nothing of any steps being taken in this matter.

Mr. Almeric Fitzroy reminds us that Home Rule, however absurd if granted to Ireland alone, may be accorded to each of the four kingdoms by a liberal extension of the principle of Grand the four kingdoms by a liberal extension of the principle of Grand Committees, the members of each country framing their measures in their own land, subject to these being eventually passed in the Imperial legislature. Mr. Leys devotes some pages to the boys who figure as "students" in Scotch Universities, and who not only annually choose a "Lord Rector," but actually (p. 536) decide "by the vote of the class . . . the names of the prize-winners!" Fancy what would be said at Eton or at Rugby, were the fifth or sixth forms—consisting of individuals equal in learning, and, as a rule, far superior in that unconscious education which is the product of good ancestry, and careful training to Scotch students—to nominate the Newcastle or the Balliol scholar of the year; or, forsooth, the Provost of Eton, a functionary, in his time, at least as useful, not to say ornamental, as a St. Andrews' or Aberdeen Lord Rector! Aberdeen Lord Rector!

Aberdeen Lord Rector!

It is an easy transition from Universities to philosophy; and Mr. W. S. Moffat contributes, on this head, a learned disquisition, which may be taken as the "ballast" of the number, on "Realism v. Idealism in Mondern Philosophy." In this he elucidates, with a commentary containing profound remarks, the doctrines held on the somewhat abstruse subject of his Essay, by such thinkers (to name only the leaders of the respective "schools" of thought) as Hamilton and J. S. Mill. We cannot expect all readers to dely as deep as these pressurers: still less to he delve as deep as these-reasoners; still less to be

"Profound in all the Nominal And Real ways above them all."

But, to those whose minds are qualified to undertake the task, the perusal of Mr. Moffat's paper will be none the less a pleasure because it demands really close attention.

Lady Malet gives some information (chiefly relating to Saxony) as to the position of German peasant proprietors, which, though containing nothing new, will be found instructive. Thrift and its results are wonderfully displayed in a peasantry which rises at four, scarcely ever, in the week tastes meat, yet the richer members of which can (p. 547) portion their daughters with £1,000 a-piece when they are married."

No more effective contrast could be imagined that that between this article, and that of "A Parisian" on "France as it is and was." The "Parisian" uses the scalpel with no tender hand: he Hays bare the cancers which are rapidly consuming whatever of healthy moral life yet exists in France. Contractors of loveless marriages, bringers-up of Godless families, men disbelieving in a Deity, scorning the idea of the existence of female virtue; women doing their best to justify the latter opinion, and dévotes themselves only as a matter of fashion—such were the denizens of Paris—nor of Paris alone—under the Second Empire; such, and worse, if we may credit "A Parisian," are they now. France furnishes a fearful instance of the moral condition to which, from want of theart, and consequent want of religion, an exceptionally gifted mation may be brought.

We have left ourselves space to mention but one more article: perhaps the pleasantest reading of the entire number, one by Mr. Evershed on "Charles Kingsley as a Naturalist and Country Clergyman." We have rarely met with a more fascinating stirratio of a man who struck out a new path in all which he undertook, had the widest sympathy for human nature in all its phases, and was deservedly beloved by all.

HEROES OF THE INDIAN EMPIRE.*

Mr. Foster has acted wisely in giving to the public a resume of the history of the great heroes of the Indian Empire. In no country in the world have the opportunities of fame and distinction been greater than in the East, where, especially in earlier times, a man was at the bottom of the ladder one day and well-migh at the top the next.

A glance at the contents of the volume will reveal the rich store of information which it contains. It tells us about Clive, the founder of our Empire in the East; Warren Hastings, who consolidated the power which his predecessor had established; conrawllis, the administrator; Wellesley the warrior; Eldred Pottinger, whose defence of Herat stands unsurpassed in the annals of bravery and daring; "Bokhara' Burnes, the diplomat; Napier, of Sind celebrity; Carey the missionary, the first translator of the Bible into a Native dialect; Martyn, who did a like task as regards the Book of Common Prayer; Duff, the Scotch Churchman, the founder of the first mission in the East connected with that form of religion; the two Lawrences who saved India. with that form of religion; the two Lawrences, who saved India during the terrible crisis of 1857-8; and lastly, that illustrious trio, Sir Henry Havelock, Sir James Outram, and Colin Campbell Lord Clyde, of whom it would be difficult to determine which was

What an array of heroes! What a galaxy of genius! Mr. Foster has executed his task with commendable diligence, and his accuracy is truly remarkable, insomuch that, reading the volume with the most scrupulous care, we have not succeeded in detecting any mistatement or questionable assertion. It would be difficult to select a work more suited for youths, inasmuch as it is no less interesting than instructive, and withal, it is a record of fact, plainly, succinctly and ably written. Mr. Foster may be congratulated on the success of his efforts.

THE WORLD OF THOUGHT.+

"The World of Thought" is the not altogether unpretentious designation assumed by a small côterie of would-be philosophers (and is the offshoot of a London club). The denizens of this "world" periodically meet in order to read essays on abstract points, and to indulge in discussion thereon. The tale, such as it is, is a loosely-drawn love-story between Edgar Adrian, one of the members of the club, and a young lady whom he rescues from a conflagration, and who turns out to be the sister of another member. On this somewhat slender thread are strung various occasions for disquisitions of the Comtist kind. We are untroduced, for instance, to a clergyman to whom prayer is a purely subjective act: a man who would have adopted the idea at one time entertained, and subsequently so earnestly repudiated, by Coleridge :-

"Of Whose all-seeing eye Aught to demand were impotence of mind."

Most of the disquisitions are on theories which (the philosophers being very much in nubibus) would figure admirably in a modern adaptation of the "Clouds" of Aristophanes. But here is one which seems to us the more delusive, in that it has a semblance of being practical. Whether it will be realised in pre-millenial times we are not (Dr. Cumming being no longer here to guide us) able to say :-

"One great benefit arising from giving sound instruction to children is that it prevents frivolous conversation being carried on When children have acquired facts which in the home circle. they can discuss, and which have been imparted by a mastertney can discuss, and which have been imparted by a master-mind, they insensibly become the pioneers of thought to their parents and to all with whom they come into contact."

Have not the poor little dears a physical as well as an intel-lectual nature to be developed? Is there to be no play, and is the cheerful conversation of the young to be put down because, forsooth, it is not "intellectual"? And "pioneers of thought to their parents!" What a grand, sonorous, meaningless phrase! May we not say, with the Athenian of old:—

ω πόποι, ώς ίερον, και σεμνόν, και τεράτωδες? "Ye gods, how supernal, and majestic, and altogether prodigious!"

We have some decidedly peculiar—but none the less readable—precepts as to the incubation of works of fiction (pp. 97, 142), ostensibly from the "bad female" of the piece, herself fine authoress of sensational novels; and (in the character of Mr. Raymond, her father,) a fairly well drawn sketch of a company-promoter.

But—a fire, a carriage accident, and a burglary, notwithstanding—the book would be the better for the infusion of more incident.
"Ne semper contempleris," said Horace long since; and it is "Ne semper contempleris," said florace long since; and it is hard on modern readers to meet, at every turn, discussions on abstruse points. A little more experience will enable the author to avoid the error of writing so obviously "with a purpose," a book which in spite of much vague and highflown language, contains, it must in justice be said, not a little which is striking and original.

BABYS' OWN ÆSOP.*

"Baby's Own Æsop," like all the productions of Walter Crane is artistic and pretty. The pictures are more than good; they are first-rate, and the rhymed version of the familiar fables, though simple, is not childish. The little volume will make an excellent present for the denizens of the nursery.

Brickdale (Edward Stanford); "Riding for Ladies," "Mrs. Power O'Donoghue" (Thacker and Co.); "India Under Victoria," by Captain Lionel Trotter (W. H. Allen and Co.)

THE Maharajah of Ulwar has sent a further donation of Rs. 400 to the Punjab University, to defray the cost of the die for the annual medal founded by him, which had been executed by Messrs. Hamilton and Co., the jewellers of Calcutta. The well-known bankers of Meean Meer, Seths Bansi Lal and Ram Battan have also sent a present of Rs. 500, which will be supplemented by another Rs. 500 to be distributed in prizes or models and by another Rs. 500, to be distributed in prizes or medals, and called the Aitchison-Ram Ratan prizes or medals.

Among the many military anecdotes which have recently ap peared allusion was made to an officer, whose charger is said to have carried him, nolens volens, into the midst of the enemy at Ahmed Kheyl in 1879. This is understood in some quarters to have referred to Captain Young, of the 19th Bengal Lancers, who was nearly cut to pieces in that action. It is said, however, to be mistake to suppose that his charger bolted with him. In the first place, the horse ridden by Captain Young at Ahmed Kheyl was known as a pre-eminently well-broken charger, obeying every motion of the hand and leg, and as bold as a lion—never known to bolt with anyone in his life—which was a pretty long one, as he was about 18 years of age. Captain Young was adjutant of the regiment at the time of the action of Ahmed Khey), and he the regiment at the time of the action of Ahmed Kheyl, and he had just galloped back from delivering a message to General Palliser, the Cavalry Brigadier, when Colonel Yorke, commanding the 19th Bengal Lancers, gave the order: "Advance in echelon from the left—march." Colonel Yorke rode about thirty yards in advance of the centre squadron, which was commanded by Captain Bruce, and Captain Young followed immediately behind the Colonel. At the moment of collision with the enemy the regiment was advancing at a fast hand-gallop, though the order to charge had not been given. Very shortly after collision the squadron behind Captain Young received the order "right wheel," which left him isolated. Here he lost sight of Colonel Yorke, but seeing the squadron leading in echelon on his left front, Captain Young set squadron leading in echelon on his left front, Captain Young set spurs to his horse in order to join it. Before he could reach it his horse was struck, stopped short and reared. Captain Young was immediately attacked by several horsemen, and as his horse continued to rear, a few seconds saw him surrounded by some thirty or forty of the enemy, and he was eventually cut down. His horse was well in hand until the animal was hit.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS IN BURMA.

Our contemporaries of the Press in India—we refer more especially to those of the English Press there—have not taken that altogether optimist view of the result of the presence of Sir Frederick Roberts in Burma as the English Press here indulged in. When the news of Sir Herbert Macpherson's death reache I this country the Times did its best to create a panic, and urged the immediate despatch of the Commander-in-Chief of India to Mandalay, in order to save disaster. It was a repetition of the old cry which was at one time common when Sir Garnet Wolseley was supposed to be England's only General. The wonder was why the departure of Lord Wolseley was not advocated, as he had seen fighting in Burms, and England's only other General had not. panic was allayed by the latter going, and we have now the opinions of writers in India who might have been expected to feel panic if it had existed, but who did not. The Calcutta Englishman, long known and recognised for the soundness of its views on military matters, thinks that the remedy of despatching the Commander-in-Chief of India post-haste to take the field was a remedy a little too heroic. It holds that it is doubtful whether the duty of putting down dacoity should be deputed to a large army.

The work before us is essentially chaukidar work, and there are those who think, with some show of reason, that such work should not have been entrusted to the troops. By turning an army of 30,000 men loose in Upper Burma, it is argued, we are more likely to harden the people into implacable hostility than to induce them to lay down their arms and return to peaceful pursuits. Our army may decimate the population; but to reclaim the people from open rebellion is a very different matter. These views are held by men who profess a special knowledge of Burma, and it is possible that they have not been adequately considered.

The Civil and Military Gazette, another well-informed authority, also wonders at the employment of 30,000 soldiers under the Commander-in-Chief in person being required to deal with dacoits.

The Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Army has now been promoted to the rank of head village policeman, to personally superintend the catching of gang robbers, to be tried by Deputy Commissioners, and defended by cheap pleaders or Mr. Moylan. Another objection to Sir F. Roberts's appointment, which is likely to be raised in the service, will be that he is following in the steps of "our only General," and aspires to be "our only Indian General." But the supercession of the civil authority in Upper Burma by the military would, with any officer of less rank, have the appearance of a slight to Sir C. Bernard. If, however, the dacoit theory is not to be abandoned, and Sir F. Roberts is merely to have Sir Herbert Macpherson's powers, then we confess the advantages of the new appointment disappear at once; and Sir Frederick Roberts would have done better to give a comrade the chance, such as it is, of distinction in Burma.

The last objection may be passed over in the assurance that Sir Frederick Roberts is too chivalrous a soldier to stand in a comrade's way, and that he returns to India in March next. The graver objection seems to be that he has been taken away from his most important duties in India, and that at a time when his presence at headquarters or on tour in Upper India is most needed. From his own statements to the Times correspondent telegraphed last week there do not appear to have been any arrangements made towards the proposed pacification which General White could not with the civil authorities have originated and carried out. That Sir Frederick Roberts will do all that is expected well may be taken for granted, but that he should be required to do it himself instead of by deputy seems a blunder.

The Indian Midland Railway is progressing favourably. The following are the stations forming a junction at Jhansi:—Itarsi on the G.I.P. Railway, Gwalior on the Agra extension, and Cawnpore and Manickpur on the E.I.R. The line to Saugor is in abeyance.

It is pretty well known that the various Government depart ments are amongst the most liberal of the investors in Government Securities, but everybody is not aware that the total sum which the departments hold in the public funds is equivalent to the enormous aggregate of £178,533,360.

THE LESSONS OF THE LATE INDIAN RIOTS. TO THE EDITOR.

Sin,—Long before this reaches you, the details of the murderous riots at Etawah, Delhi, and elsewhere, will have been published in all their hideous nakedness from one end of Great Britain to the other. Englishmen will now be in a position to realise on what a slender cord rests the unity of the two Native races of India, and how slight a strain is sufficient to snap it asunder. Those who accept for granted the stability of our ru'e in this country should not forget to lay their lessons to heart. My purpose, however, is not to enter into a discussion of this sulject here, but to refer to it incidentally, as elucidating two points in connection with the unceasing elamour that is now being raised in Bengal, viz., in regard to the repeal of the Arms' Act, and the extension of the local self-government. Nowhere throughout this vast Empire is the cry against the former more violent than in Bengal, and nowhere are its provisions more lemently admirated that there are recommendated to the self-government. Bengal, and nowhere are its provisions more teniently administered than there. Any ordinary Bengalee may obtain a license for a gun, sword, or spear, by speading a rupee or two in Government stamps, and a small bribe to the police. I could not say for certain how many licenses have been granted during the last official year; but judging from the number issued in Assam —9,000—which is a smaller, poorer, and more backward Province than Bengal, it may fairly be stated that the Lower Provinces enjoy their full share of immunity from the operations of that Act. enjoy their full share of immunity from the operations of that Act. enjoy their full share of immunity from the operations of that Act. Now if the restrictions were removed, as suggested by the Anglovernacular and vernacular papers, how would the disturbances at Etawah, Delhi, &c., have ended? I do not for a moment hesitate to say that the whole country would have risen in arms, first as a civil war among themselves, and next against the paramount power as a common enemy. The forbearance of Mr. Hoey, the Magistrate of Etawah, and the military cannot be too highly commended; but how long could the magistrate have held his own mended; but how long could the magistrate have held his own, and kept at bay a fanatic horde, if they were possessed of arms? It would be idle to speculate on the consequences. British authority was not only everywhere set at naught, but some of our police officers were wounded in their attempt to restore order. The excitement of the moment would have sufficed to lead thousands and tens of thousands of men to swerve from their loyalty, who, and tens of thousands of men to swerve from their loyalty, who, five minutes before, were law-abiding and peaceful subjects of the Queen-Empress. With Burma in an unsettled state, and occupied by a large portion of the army, and the North-West in the throes of a rebellion, matters would have assumed a pretty aspect. The ushering in of the great boon of local self-government was heralded by a flourish of trumpet, such as even the modified version of the infamous Ilbert Bill, when passed into law failed to evoke, and blessings were poured upon the head of its author. To quote an Oriental hyperbole, the lamb and the tiger would henceforth drink at the same pool. The dusky millions of India would now have their representative councils to discuss local affairs and now have their representative councils to discuss local affairs and own have their representative councils to discuss focal analysand carry out local reforms. Their right to a voice in the government of this country was recognised, and what more could they wish for? But when the day of trial came, all those hopes and aspirations were scattered to the winds. The fanatical Mussulman horde at Etawah, who would accept of no compromise, first of all booted their conficients on horseway. We give the way sent hooted their co-religionist, an honorary Magistrate, who was sent to parley with them, and next asked the Magistrate to deliver him into their hands, that they might kill him! It might be said that "one swallow does not make a summer," and that it was a solitary instance which did not govern the majority of cases. To this I emphatically reply that a straw indicates pretty fairly which way the wind blows. It found a counterpart at Delhi, where an excited crowd patiently listened to a moulvie exhorting them not to rebel against constituted authority; but a few hours afterwards these men were busily engaged at the work of destruction. This conclusively proves how far they had been impressed with the words of admonition that fell from the lips of one of their priests. Verbum sap. Marpitgunje, Nov. 2, 1886. BELMUKTHA.

RESPONSIBILITY.

TO THE EDITOR.

Sir,—Our Government of India would do well to study the letter of Mr. Theodore Beck, the Principal of the College at Alygurh, which is published in the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 10th ult., page 600.

The principle of government in England appears to be, no power and no responsibility. The people of England object to invest any one man with power, and are too just to exact responsibility where there is no power: they were even is along of the sibility where there is no power; they were even jealous of the Iron Duke, whose rectitude and simple and unassuming habits ought to have inspired confidence: who in 1844 appeared to be very powerful, in 1846 deprived himselt of power; in 1848, that terrible year of Revolution, was adored by law-abiding men and women, and then forgotten.

During 200 years we have failed in the government of Ireland, because we refuse to invest any person with power.

In India we are drifting into anarchy. Our empire in India rests upon the knowledge and good judgment of district officers, and of colonels of regiment; and we have been persistently during twenty years depriving them of power. The chief magistrates of districts ought to be the best men to be obtained for leve or money; they ought to be the best men to be obtained for leve or money; they ought to be thoroughly acquainted with the tem; er of the people, with their wants, wishes, and designs: every influential man in the district ought to be known to them. Instead of selecting the best men we could find, whether University men or military men, or Natives of India, we have appointed competition walls without power or responsibility, Chinese sticks liable to break as soon as a common riot takes place. What can we expect when we have to face a rebellion or a revolution? How we expect when we have to face a rebellion or a revolution? How vas it that the Government of France fell, and was crushed nearly 100 years ago?

Common sense tells us that we need not be jealous of the authority of district officers, who can at any moment be relegated into obscurity in England by the Viceroy with a stratch of his pen .- Your obedient servant,

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE ON THE CELEBRATION OF THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE.

At the afternoon party which was given to Sir Roper Lethbridge, C.I.E., M.P., and Lady Lethbridge, by Khan Bahadoor Byramjee Dadabhoy, Sir Roper, in returning thanks for the toast of his health and that of Lady Lethbridge, said:—Khan Bahadur Byramjee Dadabhoy, Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, Mr. Justice Nauabhai Haridas, ladies and gentlemen.—I can assure you I am unable to find words adequately to express the gratification of Nauabhai Haridas, ladies and gentlemen.—I can assure you I am unable to find words adequately to express the gratification of Lady Lethbridge and myself at the exceedingly kind way in which my friend the Khan Bahaduı has proposed our health, and the magnificent reception accorded to us this evening. When Mr. and Mrs. Byramjee did us the honour to invite us to this gathering, I had no idea that we should find assembled here such a large and distinguished representation of the intellect, the enterprise, and all that is most enlightened and most progressive in Bombay and in India. We are deeply touched at the kindly feelings and the generous impulses which have brought together, to welcome us back to are deeply touched at the kindly feelings and the generous impulses which have brought together, to welcome us back to India, the acknowledged and popular head of the Indian community of Bombay—(applause)—and such a notable assemblage of the leaders and this of thought and activity in every section of that community—(cheers). The Khan Bahadur has spoken in the kindest terms of some friendly services we were able to render his son Mr. Manickji in England; but this I can say, that the eminently successful career of Mr. Manickji in London—and I am delighted to be able to say so in the presence of parents who may eminently successful career of Mr. Manickji in London—and I am delighted to be able to say so in the presence of parents who may justly be proud of him—has been such as to render quite unneccessary any help and any introductions that his friends could give him. I think it might encourage those young gentlemen here (and I hope there are many) who may be contemplating a visit to England, to know that Mr. Manickji's marked ability and eloquence, his high and independent character, and his amiable disposition, have not only obtained for him the friendship of eminent politicians like Lord Harris and Sir John Gorst, but have also placed him in the honourable position of an elected have also placed him in the honourable position of an elected member of the Council of the East India Association, and in other ways singled him out as a man of mark. Now that he has triumphantly passed his final examination for the Bar and is about to return to India, I feel perfectly sure that a high and useful career awaits him in this country, and I am confident that you, gentlemen, will watch that career with interest and sympathy—(cheers). This Indian tour of my wife and myself, which has opened so agreeably to day, has been undertaken with a two-fold object. In the first place, we have come out to revisit old and beloved scenes, to awaken cherished memories, and to renew communion with old and dear friends. Of these latter, most are of course Natives of the other side of India; where my most are of course Natives of the other side of India; where my own service and Lady Lethbridge's residence mainly lay, and I need not tell you we are looking forward to our visit to Bengal, where we received so many kindnesses of old; but after your reception this evening. I am sure we may be permitted to feel that, if it should please God to spare us again to revisit India, it will not be only in Bengal that we shall look up old and true friends. Then, too, we have come to enable me profitably to take part in the Parlia-Bengal that we shall look up old and true friends. Then, too, we have come to enable me profitably to take part in the Parliamentary discussions on Indian affairs that are to take place in the House of Commons next Session. In a friendly social gathering like this, it would ill become me to enter into politics; but this I may say, that my great desire in Parliament—and it is a desire heartily approved of by my constituents in North Kensington and by the great heart of the British nation—is to render some real and true service to India, and to the peoples of India, to whom I owe so much. I desire, if you will permit meand I say this with all frankness and sincerity—to present your views and your wishes, the intelligent opinions and the just your views and your wishes, the intelligent opinions and the just aspirations of the most enlightened communities of India, honestly and fearlessly to the impartial arbitrament of the British Parliament—(loud cheers). Pending the return to Parliament of capable representatives actually born in this country—a result capable representatives actually born in this country—a result which I ardently desire to see, and which such a gathering of able citizens as the present leads me to hope for in the not distant future—I venture to ask you to look upon me as a loyal spokesman of yours in the House of Commons. And let us not forget that the year on which we are about to enter will be one of special interest to all those subjects of her Most Gracious Majesty who are imbued with that ardent spirit of loyalty for which you gentlemen of Bombay are so renowned. It will be the happy and glorious Jubilee of Her Majesty's reign—(cheers); and before I sit down I should like to advert to two movements in connection with that Jubilee. Majesty's reign—(cheers); and before I sit down I should like to advert to two movements in connection with that Jubilee, which I know will obtain your heartiest sympathy, and which I believe will have the happiest results for the future well-being of India. One of those movements, originated by the far-seeing and warm-hearted benevolence of her Excellency the Countess of the figure of the Queen's Tubilee in a way. and warm-hearted benevolence of her Excellency the Countess of Dufferin, aims at a celebration of the Queen's Jubilee in a way most pleasing to Her Majesty's true womanly heart, by providing screly-needed medical help for the women of India. That movement has already taken deep root among us, both here and in England, and it eminently deserves your warmest interest—(cheers), and the other Jubilee celebration of which I would speak is a movement of similar national importance, and one from which I venture to predict a great increase of commercial prosperity for India, as well as a considerable enhancement of the prestige and dignity of India, her princes and her peoples, among the great civilised communities of the world. I need not say that I refer to the proposal, graciously made by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and already enthusiastically taken up and adopted in London and in the Colonies, for the celebration of the Jubilee of Her Majesty by the establishment in the heart of the Empire of a permanent Imperial, Indian, and Colonial Institution, to be the focus and centre of the industries. the arts, the learning, and indeed generally of the commercial, industrial and scientific enterprise of the whole of the vast dominions of our beloved Sovereign. The way has been admirably smoothed for such an institution by the very successful Exhibition of the past year. The ephemeral attractions of the Exhibition as a place of entertainment have brought together Exhibition as a place of entertainment have brought together millions of Europeans and Americans of all classes, and interested them in the products and resources of our Empire; and now that those attractions have served their purpose, they will, of course, cease with the closing of the Exhibition. But if, by the fostering care of our patriotic Prince of Wales, and by the spontaneous loyalty to her Majesty of the princes and people of the Empire, the instructive commercial and ethnographical elements of the Exhibition should be rendered. permanent, and developed into a vast Imperial Institution, I am sure you will agree with me in believing that its establishment will mark a new era in the economic and scientific progress of the Empire. And now, ladies and gentlemen, while heartily thanking you for the kindness with which you have listened to these few remarks of mine, I will end where I began, and beg to assure you, on behalf of Lady Lethbridge as well as myself, that this afternoon will ever remain a very bright spot in our memories, and that we shall cherish the remembrance of the treat honory you have done us to the last day of our lives great honour you have done us to the last day of our lives-(cheers).—Bombay Gazette.

THE P. and O. steamer Shannon which was at Colombo on the 4th inst. had one of the longest lists of passengers ever published by the Ceylon papers. Nearly every berth was taken; and a Colombo paper learns that the same condition of affairs will exist in regard to the next three or four mail steamers for the Southern Colonies. The rush from England of Exhibition visitors, escaping the winter in Europe and hastening back to the summer of the south, explains this circumstance. The Marquis (and Marchioness) of Stafford and Lord Tarbat—both sons of the Duke of Sutherland who was in Ceylon with the Prince of Wales-are travelling by the Shannon, and have made themselves exceedingly popular on board. In three months time, the Marquis and party expect to be back, and to spend some time in Ceylon en route to Bombay. They all called on Governor and Lady Gordon at Queen's House on the 4th inst.

Mr. Pincott.—Mr. Pincott appears to possess a special faculty for discovering the lost key to archaic literary puzzles. Some two years ago we called attention to a very remarkable paper of two years ago we called attention to a very remarkable paper of his in the Royal Asiatic Society's Journal, in which he clearly demonstrated the principle on which the hymnsof the Rigveda were arranged. Pundits and European scholars alike had previously failed to recognise any trace of method in their sequence. Even Professor Max Müller, who has devoted a lifetime to their study, had never grasped the clue till Mr. Pincott supplied it. In a second paper, recently published, he has been equally successful in his treatment of the Adi-Granth, the sacred book of the Sikhs. This is a bulky work containing as many as 3,384 hymns, which their learned translator. Dr. Trumpp, has described as jumbled to-This is a bulky work containing as many as 3,384 hymns, which their learned translator, Dr. Trumpp, has described as jumbled together, just as they came to hand, without any judicious selection, and forming an exceedingly incoherent and wearisome farrago. It is no slight triumph for Mr. Pincott to have succeeded in reducing this mere promiscuous heap of verses—as it seemed to be—into a systematic collection in which the position of every single hymn is regulated by precise considerations. The main division is threefold; the first part being liturgical, the second a hymnal, and the third a miscellaneous supplement. So much has generally been understood; but the arrangement of the hymnal has always been a mystery, except that it was seen to be divided inte thirty a mystery, except that it was seen to be divided inte thirty groups, or rags, according to the particular musical note dominating the time for singing. An exhaustive analysis now shows that the hymns in each group are first classified by metre and then according to their authorship; the writer, twenty-two in number, following one after the other in a regular order of precedence, in which the Hindus come before the Mahomedan fakir, Shaikh Farid, after whom cemes the solitary female composer, Miri Bai. Thus, briefly stated, the principle seems obvious enough: but it had been obscured by solitary female composer, Miri Bai. Thus, briefly stated, the principle seems obvious enough: but it had been obscured by the fact that in many of the raigs only a few of the twenty-two writers are represented, and thus their invariable occurrence in one order was not readily apparent. The discovery is of importance, because it shows that the positions of the hymns have no reference to their antiquity or dogmatic authority. This was no result the most important Trumpp's theory, who declares that all the most important matter was collected in the first four groups, and that the remainder were a second gleaning as materials offered themselves. He thus contented himself with translating the earlier portion only, which amounts to little more than one-third of the entire book.—Pioneer.

COLD WEATHER VISITORS.—The Indian Mirror says:—We are glad that India is attracting so many and so eminent English gentlemen and noblemen to visit her. We fervently hope that good and nothing but good will be the result of the personal knowledge of India which our English visitors will acquire by their observation of the condition of the people.

LIBERALITY.—The Lahore paper says:—"A man who wis saved from drowning by a passer-by once gratefully presented his rescuer with a sixpence. History has repeated itself not a hundred miles from the Kutub Minar. During some recent disturbances a Hindoo gentleman of note took it into his head that he was specially marked out for the vengeance of an opposite faction. Under this impression he begged an European employé of a firm he was connected with to pass the night at his house, and asked him to get a friend or two to accompany him. He accordingly presented himself with two companions after an early diuner, and presented himself with two companions after an early dinner, and the three passed the night trying to soothe the excited nerves of their host, whose agitation made him rather forgetful of the rites of hospitality. Not a bite or sup had the three all night, yet they tried their best, in the absence of spirits to pour down, to keep up the spirits of their host. The result proved that he was not unmindful of their efforts. After quiet was restored, and his peace of mind had returned, he presented to each of his gallant defenders a bunch of plantains.

COLONEL F. W. CHATTERTON.—A correspondent writes:—"By the transfer of Colonel Chatterton to Calcutta society in Agra will suffer a great loss, for it is hardly too much to say that, for the last seven or eight years, he has been the mainspring of every form of public entertainment. Ball, concert, theatrical, lawntennis, picnic—whatever Madam Anglo-India delights in—have been devised and managed by him with a tact, energy, and good-nature that made success a certainty. To him, also, the Club, the most comfortable and complete of any outside the Presidency towns, owes nearly everything. The farewell dinner, at which so many of his old friends hope to be present, was prevented by his heing called upon to join his new appointment sooner than had been expected; but there are other means besides a farewell dinner by which those old friends would like to prove to Colonel Chatterton the sincerity of their regret at losing him, and their appreciation of all that they have owed him in so many various ways."

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

.... The bost service which I ever randered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenœum Club, June 23, 2000.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

There is also an Account of Anglo-Indian Periodical Literature, and a brief Sketch of Sporting Literature in India, in which many well-known and distinguished Anglo Indians are mentioned.

Anglo Indians are mentioned.

The object of the above work (originally published in 1875) is to give, in a convenient form, sketches of some of the distinguished men who have materially assisted in building up the fabric of our great Indian Empire. The London Press bestowed a considerable amount of praise on the former little volume, the Standard remarking that it should have been twice the size; 'while the Friend of India said that "every Anglo-Indian should read" what a London journal styled "a deeply interesting volume."

A DICTIONARY OF ISLAM.

Be ng a Cyclopædia of the Doctrines, Rites, Geremonies, and Customs, together with the Technical and Theological Terms, of the Muhammadan Religion.

THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D. M.R.A.S.

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary of the Church Missionary Society, Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Mul immadan Religion, and we can only hope that the stelling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary Wo. id.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr. Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to ad those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the literature of the Arabs; and the volume before us, as the work of one man, is a mirrel of industry, and fatrly to be characterised as a cyclopedia of the decrines, rites, coremonies, and customs; together will the technical and theological terms of the Muhammedan religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughes' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. . . We have read many of its activies with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Mussalman faith, the information being in every case taken from the most esteemed Muhammatan sources, with the comments of the best European scholars.

This most useful work will be of undoubted value to the student of comparative religion."—Homeward Mail.

BROAD ARROW

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE. ESTABLISHED 1833.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRIOR SIXPENCE.

'The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette' has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its corre-pondence columns to all grades

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette."
reely opens its corre-pondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is ufforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."
"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazetta"

ments."
"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marino bureaux of the Frensh, Russian, and other Government, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng'and regarding Military affairs.

"VOICE OF INDIA." THE

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian ceople.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian ceople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally decile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 26th November; from Allahabad and Madras to the 24th November; and from Calcutta to the 28rd November.

The Viceroy's visit to Bombay terminated on the 19th instant, when his Excellency proceeded to Poona, where he arrived on the afternoon of the same day. At Bombay Lord Dufferin distributed the prizes to successful students of the School of Arts; attended various entertainments given by Parsee gentlemen; visited the Elephanta Caves; and received and replied to addresses. His Excellency only made a short stay at Poona, where he was presented with an address from the Sarvajanik Sabba, an important Native association which has its headquarters at Poona. Lord Dufferin's reply conveys a severe censure to the Native Press of Bengal, which has systematically and wilfully misrepresented the intentions of the British and Indian Governments in connection with the re-examination of the conditions of the Indian Civil S rvice about to be made by a specially-appointed Commission.

From Poona the Viceroy proceeded to Aurangabad and Nandgaon, en route to Hyderabad, the Countess of Dufferin accompanying the Viceroy.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught have proceeded to Jummu, in Kashmir, on a short visit.

THE Commander-in-Chief reached Mandalay on the 17th, and with his arrival there the winter campaign commenced. Already there are signs, in the frequent news of skirmishes, that operations are becoming more practicable, and that they will be pushed with all the vigour that circumstances will allow. Flying columns are now out in almost every district, and encounters on a greater or less scale are taking place from every quarter of the compass.

A FIGHT took place with dacoits on the 10th inst., to the north of Shwebo, in which Lieutenant Palfour, of the 51st Regiment, was killed, and Mr. Rey, Superintendent of Police, severely wounded. The exact loss of the enemy is not known; but in another affair, in the same district, on the 14th, a party under Captain Vaughan attacked and dispersed a party of Nga Yaing's gang, killing nineteen and wounding twelve.

On the 13th inst. a large body of dacoits attacked Lieutenant-Colonel Anderson and a party of his regiment, the 3rd Madras Infantry, as they were marching from Yemethen to Myingyan to rejoin headquarters and return to India on relief. Lieutenant-Colonel Anderson was shot through the neck, but not killed, and one Sepoy was killed and seven wounded. The enemy's loss is reported to have been severe.

THERE have been other but small skirmishes with the dacoits, in which they have been defeated with trifling loss, in consequence of their ability to retreat into dense jungle.

THE Honourable General Chesney, Military Member of the Council, has gone to Burma to meet the Commanderin-Chief and Sir Charles Bernard.

COLONEL TREVOR, Mr. Garrett, and Rai Jai Prakash Lall retire from the Bengal Council this season, their terms of office having expired, and Mr. Colman Macaulay, Mr. T. T. Allen, the Legal Remembrancer, and Babu Kally Nath Mitter will be appointed in their stead. Mr. Irving and Moulvi Abdul Jubbar are reappointed as representatives respectively of the Trade Association and the Muhomedans.

COLONEL FILGATE was to have returned to duty as Accountant-General, Public Works Department, but, the Finance Committee's inquiries not having been concluded, his reversion to his substantive appointment is postponed. Mr. Macdonald, officiating Deputy Accountant-General, goes to Burma for special duty at Mandalay.

THE Finance Committee has recommended the amalgation of the Collectorship of Customs in Calcutta with the post of Superintendent of Stamps and Stationery; also the abolition of the post of Secretary to the Government of Bengal in the Legislative Department and the dispersion of his office, the work to be done by the Judicial Department.

In accordance with a recommendation made by the same Committee the Madras Municipal funds are to be burdened with a contribution of Rs. 50,000 towards the cost of the up-keep of the Presidency Police. No hopes are held out of the burden being removed for, at any rate, five years—the term of the next Provincial contract.

THE work on the "Imperial Gazeteer" being completed, Mr. Hunter's office is being broken up.

THE work on the Assam and Behar Railway is to be proceeded with, after having been stopped for two years. The engineers in charge have received orders to begin at once, and to finish the line as soon as possible.

The final sanction for the extension to the North-West-Provinces of the Indian Councils' Act has not yet been given, though the papers have been before the Secretary of State for some time.

A good example of the assistance that may be rendered in the administration of criminal justice by honorary Magistrates was afforded last year in the North-West Provinces and Oudh. In the North-West the unpaid Magistrates disposed of 21,985 cases, and in Oudh they got through 7,155, or nearly a quarter of all the cases disposed of by the criminal courts in the united provinces.

MR. JUSTICE HOTCHINS, of the Madras High Court, has been appointed Provisional Member of the Madras Council.

A forecast of the cotton crop in the Hyderabad Assigned Districts for the season 1886-87 is very favourable. The area under cotton exceeds that of last year by 13.8 per cent. There is an increase of as much as 29.1 and 36.7 per cent, in the districts of Akola and Buldana respectively. This large advance is ascribed to seasonable rainfall at sowing time, and the success of last year's crop, which has done much to encourage cultivation.

INTELLIGENCE from Cabul shows that the Ghilzai rising has not yet been suppressed. There has been prolonged fighting between the Ameer's Duranies and the Ghilzai in the neighbourhood of Ghuzuee, but neither party seems to have gained any advantage over the other.

THE Ghilzais, it is said, have despatched a message to their tribesmen, the soldiers of the Ameer at Herat, calling upon them to rebel against the Ameer.

According to information received from Kandahar, dated the 9th inst., the Ghilzais had been defeated by the Ameer's troops, with a loss of several thousand men. The news is of the most meagre kind, but it may be assumed that the first defeat by the Ameer's Commander-in-Chief, Golam Hyder Ali, after which "several cartloads of heads" were sent into Cabul, has been followed up by another which should satisfactorily reduce the fighting strength of the Ghilzais for some time.

A GOVERNMENT telegraph office was opened in Kila Aballah on the 13th inst. to facilitate the communications between Mr. Barnes, the Political Agent at Chaman, and the Agent to the Governor-General in Beluchistan.

THE last labour of the Afghan Boundary Commission will be the working up of all the materials that were collected by the Survey parties during the two years' expedition into a regular series of maps. This responsible work has been placed in the charge of Captain Gore, R.E., and will be carried out at Dehra Dun.

Notes of the Week.

A Return, which has been anxiously looked forward to, has been prepared in India, showing our military casualties in Upper Burma up to the 31st October last. It is said, however, to be incomplete, as no return has been received from the garrison of Bhamo, where the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, who have suffered severely, are stationed. The 2nd Battalion Rifle Brigade, the Madras Pioneers, and the 18th and 26th Bengal Regiments and 3rd Goorkhas are also omitted from the list.

But even in its incomplete form it will be sad enough reading. The loss has been as follows:—British: Killed in action, 23; died from disease, 349; wounded, 66; invalided, 575; total, 1,013. Native: Killed in action, 44; died from disease, 363; wounded, 153; invalided, 793; total, 1,353.

Among the British regiments the 2nd Battalion Prince Albert's Somersetshire Light Infantry, which only arrived in Upper Burma in May, has lost two officers and six men in action, and 102 men from disease, while three officers and 129 men have been invalided. The 2nd Battalion Hampshire Regiment, which accompanied General Prendergast, has lost two officers and one man in action, 78 men from disease, and five officers and 219 men invalided, besides 13 wounded. The King's Liverpool Regiment have lost in action 10 men, from disease 76, 149 invalided, and 14 wounded.

Among the Native troops the 12th Madras lost 1 officer and 4 men in action, 28 from disease, 194 invalided, and 13 wounded. The 23rd Madras number 142 casualties, and the 43rd Goorkhas, which have but recently arrived, have lost 73 from disease, while 31 have been invalided.

THE cost of all our Burmese wars has always been a heavy one in human life, owing to the climate. In the campaign which gained the fertile province of Pegu there died, between January, 1852, and May, 1853, 54 officers and 1,353 European soldiers, and 2,000 Sepoys. These died from disease alone, and were exclusive of the large number who fell in action during the military operations.

According to the Times correspondent Sir M. E. Grant Duff has left Madras without being much regretted in the Southern Presidency, it being the general verdict of the Indian Press that he has proved a failure as a Governor. The correspondent telegraphs that, according to one expressed opinion:—

Sir M.,E. Grant Duff was not suited to a place of small affairs, and in the smallest of small affairs, in matters personal, blot upon blot, which a firmer or more sympathetic hand would certainly have averted, has fallen upon the fair record of administrative progress. The public eye, which delights in things personal, has been focussed on blots. The greater facts, the good deeds of silont fame, the works that go on independently of persons in high places, have been blurred in the background, and the Presidency has felt that it wrongly suffered for the sins of too little governang.

Admitting that his late Excellency failed as a ruler we still cannot believe that he did so because the place was too small for the exercise of his abilities. We should have thought that the Madras Presidency was almost large enough for the display of a little common sense statesmanship, at all events. Or was it the aspiration of the complainants to have "a smaller man with a larger heart?"

It did not require a poet's invocation to the gods that we might see ourselves as others see us to convince the most acceptical that there would be some advantage in the arrangement if could be carried out. The following, taken from an Indian contemporary, is, we admit, rather strong writing—but the provocation to such writing was also strong, and the republication of the paragraph can do no harm if it does no good to those to whom it refers:—

It is a poor sort of ambition that seeks to rise by denunciation of one's compatriots, and destruction of one's national glory. We are always sorry for men like Mr. Cotton, who can never win the respect of Natives, and as surely incur the contempt of Europeans, for neither can believe they are genuine in their affected sympathies and antipathies. No man worthy the name would voluntarily sacrifice personal dignity, honour, national reputation, and all a true patriot holds sacred for an ephemeral popularity that may be a means of advancing him a step or two on the ladder of official promotion, at the sacrifice of his sincerity. Lord Ripcn tried to throw a sop to Cerberus, and was said by Native papers to be worshipped by his clients. We say without any fear of contradiction that his name is execrated by all who have been able to gauge his dastardly servility to Native interests, at the expense of every quality for which a British patriot is so justly esteemed.

THE gallant stand made by the 66th (Berkshire) Regiment on the ill-fated field of Maiwand, when overpowered by numbers, officer and soldier, from colonel to drummerboy, fell fighting to the last, is amongst the memories of bright deeds which England will not willingly let die. The friends of those who died on that sad day of disaster to the British arms have placed in the Forbury-gardens, Reading, a memorial monument to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of that distinguished regiment who lost their lives on the occasion, and this monument is to be unveiled by the Lord-Lieutenant of Berkshire on the afternoon of Saturday next.

The veteran, Sir William P. Andrew, however baffled by enemies to his sound and sensible views concerning the Euphrates Valley Railway route, returns undismayed to the charge. He has again republished his letter to the Times concerning the "Advance of Russia" towards the East, attaching to it an Appendix containing some valuable remarks by Dr. A. Sprenger, in which that scholar fully supports the views so long advocated by Sir William. "It is to be regretted," writes the learned Doctor, "that your voice was not listened to four years ago, when you delivered your admirable lecture, and I fear, if England tarries longer, the Russians will anticipate you, and the world will say, "Roma deliberante Saguntum perüt."

Dr. Sprenger adds: "There is not a moment to be lost to carry out your views on a grand scale It appears to me that independently of the profits arising from the traffic with India, a railway from the Mediterranean to Babylonia (say as far as Saglaweych), would amply pay, and can, if the measures for regenerating the country are carried out with vigour, safely be undertaken without Government guarantees."

MR. THEODORE BECK, Principal of the Mahomedan College at Aligarh, is pretty certain to be asked to give evidence before the Public Service Commission, and it may be a convenient thing to examine him upon his letter to the Allahabad paper, in which he endeavours, as he says, to disengage a few of the questions involved in the inquiry. He writes very strongly against the rule by which Native officials receive only two-thirds of the pay of English, but not always in a fashion that the supporters of Native claims would approve of. We should not, for instance, expect to hear from them a plea for the full pay of a Native judge on the ground that if we give him only two-thirds as much as his English brother he may take bribes. The argument is well meant, but it is gauche, and not very well founded, and those in whose behalf it is put forward will not thank Mr. Beck for it. The answer to it is, that if a Native official will take bribes when he receives two-thirds the pay of English officials of the same rank, he will take them however high his pay may be made, for he is practically as well off as the Englishman—perhaps in these days of fallen exchange a little better. If in any single department of unofficial service in India Natives and Europeans were paid at the same rate there would be some ground for the objection to the two-thirds rule. But the fact is notoriously the other way. The merchant or professional man in India who has to choose between employing a Native and a European for a particular employment is often determined in favour of the Native by the knowledge that he will have to pay him less—often much less than two-thirds the salary that a European would require.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.) (Times Correspondents.) INDIA.

CALCUTTA, DEC. 12. The incidents of the Viceroy's tour during the last week have attracted little attention, as he devoted himself rather to relaxation and sight-seeing than meetings with Native princes and the delivering of speeches. Leaving Bangalore, on Sunday morning, he reached Trichinopoly in the evening. On Monday he examined he reached Trichinopoly in the evening. On Monday he examined the celebrated fort at that place, and some ancient temples in the vicinity. A deputation of the inhabitants presented an address, and the Viceroy in replying, alluded to these temples, saying that the nation that had once produced such monuments might well claim a heritage of genius which, however dimmed for the time by unfavourable circumstances, was, he trusted, destined to reassert itself, though perhaps in a different direction.

On Tuesday the Viceroy proceeded to Madura, the most sacred city in Southern India. The Great Pagoda was visited on the same afternoon, the party being conducted over it by the chief priest, who delivered a speech, expressing his sense of the high honour conferred by the visit. Tanjore was reached next day, and aft r a short stay, Lord Dufferin went on to Pondicherry. It has been arranged that the Viceroy shall go by land from Pondicherry to Madras, embark at the latter place, and arrive in Calcutta and land in state on Wednesday evening.

the usil steamer at Bombay on Friday.

Mr. Bourke arrived in Madras on Tuesday evening. He landed next morning, and drove immediately to the Council Chamber, where he was received by the Members of Council and the high officials. The Royal Commission having been read, he took his seat as Governor, under a solute of seventeen guns.

The Public Service Commission assembled at Lahore on Wednesday. After sitting there for ten or twelve days it will proceed to Allahabad, then to Madas, then to Bombay and Nagpore, and to Allahabad, then to Madias, then to Bombay and Nagpore, and finally to Calcutta, and will probably remain about ten days in each place. Meanwhile, it has published, and invited answers to a ponderous array of questions, 184 in number, arranged under various headings, and apparently intended to elicit information on every possible subject connected with the services. As one complete set of answers to these questions would fill a fair-sized volume, it seems likely that that the final report of the Commission, when finished, will require a library for its accommodation.

On Friday afternoon a preliminary meeting of the delegates

On Friday afternoon a preliminary meeting of the delegates from the Calcutta Corporation and various associations was held from the Calcutta Corporation and various associations was held to consider the best means of celebrating the Queen's Jubilee. The majority of those present were strongly in favour of holding the celebration during the winter, while the Viceroy and the Government are in Calcutta, and when the climate is more suitable for festivities than it is in June; but it was ultimately agreed that the decision of this point should be left to the Viceroy. The question then arose whether the ceremony at Calcutta should be for the city only, or be constituted on a wider basis, so as to include the whole province. This point was also left for the Viceroy's decision. It was agreed that another meeting should be held after his arrival.

ang should be held after his arrival.

The Bengal Chamber of Commerce having invited its members The Bengal Chamber of Commerce having invited its members to express an opinion on the question whether the fall in the exchange had been on the whole beneficial to the commerce and industries of India, the Hon. Robert Steel, one of the leading merchants of this city, has published a reply, in which he gives his reasons for answering the question in the affirmative. He refuses to accept the reasoning and statistics put forward by Mr. O'Conor in a paper lately published by the Government, and argues that the Government, as well as the country, gains by the fall in silver, not only by reason of its effect in stimulating the agricultural industry, but also because with every decline in the purchasing power of silver it receives more silver for Bengal opium. But for the fall in silver, he says, the opium revenue, instead of remaining stationary, would have been dwindling away. The conclusions which he finally draws are, that the falling of the exchange inwolves most important gains to India at large, and increases the wolves most important gains to India at large, and increases the wealth of the country and its capacity for bearing taxation; while the direct revenue of the Government does not suffer, since the consequent gains to the revenue are greater than the losses. If the balance between revenue and expenditure has not been emaintained, the cause, he thinks, is to be found in the remission of taxation on the one hand, and in military charges and the cost of defensive work on the other.

The Government has interposed to prevent the Lucknow municipality from demolishing Neill's Arch, the gateway from the top of which General Neill was shot. So much as has been demolished is to be rebuilt, and two marble lions which formerly stood there are to be replaced. It is also proposed to place in the Residency grounds a stone block engraved with details of the experiences of the garrison during the siege.

It is stated that the Bengalee agitators propose to convoke another mass meeting to discuss political questions, after the dashion of the Jhankergachee meeting of last year.

BURMA.

MANDALAY, DEC. 7. Immediately after the next English mail arrives, General Roberts, accompanied by General White, Colonel Collett, Quarter-master-General, Colonel Pole Carew, Military Secretary, Major Hamilton, A.D.C., and Major Nicholson, R.E., will leave Mandalay for Bhamo. The Commander-in-Chief considers that Bnamo is too important a position to be left uniquested, and therefore has too important a position to be left uninspected, and therefore has decided personally to see the defersive and other local arrangements made. He will take the opportunity of the Viceroy being at sea for a few days to run up to Bhamo, where he will remain for two days.

Colonel Carey continues in a dangerous condition.

In the Tragaing District between the 1st and 4th inst. three Bohs and 38 followers surrendered with 19 guns and 43 Dahs. In Shwebo Lieutenant M'Sweeny, with 44 lances of the Hyderabad Contingent, surprised a band of insurgents and captured 20 prisoners. The work of disarming the villagers is steadily proceeding.

Cholera has broken out among the troops in the Yemethen District. Surgeon Kelsall is dead, and Lieutenant Shaw, of the 2nd Queen's, is ill. Both officers were attacked yesterday.

There has been a slight skirmish with a band of dacoits in the Yan District. No news of Boshway has been received for some days past. His present position is unknown, and, owing to the unhealthiness of the district, the columns ordered to attack him will not start till the 15th inst.

Mandalay, Dec. 8. Sir Frederick Roberts and General White will start on Saturday next on a tour of inspection through Upper Burma.

DECEMBER 9. The Hyderabad cavalry maintain their active pursuit of the Chief Hla-oo.

Great success is attending the administration of Mr. Colquhoun in the Tsagaing district. Many of the insurgent leaders are submitting to him, and his efforts are being actively assisted by the Phongyces.

A treacherous plot, with wide namifications, in which Chinese are involved, has been discovered to be at work in the Bhamo

RANGOON, DEC. 9. A party of the Naval Brigade has surprised fifty dacoits near Silch, a village in the Minhla district. The dacoits opened fire, which the Naval Brigade men refrained from returning on account of the women and children. They eventually shot the mounted leader of the rebels.

The Chinese General Woong-Yung-Ho and the Consul-General Tsing, Chinese Imperial Commissioners, are visiting the Chinese residents in various ports. They left Rangoon on the 7th inst. for the Straits Settlements.

The 12th Bengal Infantry, the Khelat-i-Ghilzai Regiment, has been ordered to Burma.

The Indian Government has authorised the immediate raising of 2,000 men in Northern India for service in the Burmese police MANDALAY, DEC. 11. General Roberts and his staff started to day for Bhamo. Colonel Carey's condition shows some signs of improvement.

The country occupied by Boshway will be thoroughly scoured by the troops under Brigadier-General Low. On the 15th inst. six columns will commence a combined movement against him. Three columns will operate in the country to the north of the old frontier, south of Minthu, and between the Irrawaddy on the east and the Arracan Hills on the west. A fourth column will advance on Napeh, and afterwards operate in the district adjacent to the Mou river. A fifth column, advancing from Saleumyo, will operate to the north of the area occupied by the fourth column up to the Yau country. The sixth column will occupy Pouk, in the Yau country, cuttying off Boshway's retreat in that direction. General Low's operations have hitherto been limited to the task of clearing the dacoits out of a tract of country, twenty miles wide and eighty miles long, to the west of the Irrawaddy. It is intended, when the combined movement against Boshway is concluded, that the troops shall break up into smaller columns, and the country will then be thoroughly searched for insurgents Desultory skirmishing continues.

SIR WILLIAM P. ANDREW, C.I.E., has reprinted a letter he published in the Times in August last, entitled, "The Advance of Russia," in which he points out the importance of the Euphrates Valley route—of special importance at the present time, having regard to the fact that Russian railways in Asia are approaching close to the frontier of Afghanistan. An appendix to the pamphlet gives a letter addressed to Sir William by Dr. A. Spenger, in which he states, "there is not a moment to be lost to carry out your views on a grand cale. It appears to me that independently of the profits arising from the traffic with India, a railway from the Mediterranean to Babylonia—say, as far as Saglaweyeh would amply pay, and can, if the measures for regenerating the country are carried out with vigour, be safely undertaken without Government guarantees."

THE SALE OF CEYLON TEA IN LONDON.

(Ceylon Observer.)

The information sent to us by our London correspondent detailing arrangements that have been made by well known Ceylon men for the sale of our island teas in the Metropolis and elsewhere throughout England will be deemed satisfactory without doubt, as being a step in the direction we have always desired to see followed. But the particular case instanced is, after all, but a single step and car carried he held to field any the to see followed. But the particular case instanced is, after all, but a single step, and can scarcely be held to fulfil all the requirements of the position. The names of the gentlemen by whom this new venture is supported will certainly be a sufficient guarantee that, under their auspices, all will be done that can be done by a limited Association. But, while expressing this amount of satisfaction we cannot but feel that, if we are to obtain all the success that we desire towards the assurance that tea of a high quality shall always with certainty be obtainable by English consumers, it will have to be secured by means far more extended than are likely to be at the command of the Ceylon Tea Growers' Company, Limited.

It is to a syndicate of the main body of those interested in teagrowing in the colony that we must look for the full realisation of our desires. It must be by compact action that such will be obtained; by the sinking of rivalry and unworthy competition such as we fear we are not likely to be altogether free from when such as we fear we are not likely to be altogether free from when private interests are held paramount to the public good. Such a syndicate has been much discussed in our columns. Our planters one and all should give it their support, and they must do so if they hope to see the chicanery of the retail grocer defeated, and to convey assurance to the home consumer that what he purchases as pure Ceylon tea is what it is represented to be. We by no as pure Ceylon tea is what it is represented to be. We by no means undervalue the possible result to the enterprise now started. means undervalue the possible result to the enterprise now started. We have no doubt that the article it will submit for sale to the English public will be all that the best well-wishers for the presperity of this colony could desire. But they are bound in the very nature of things to have to submit to a competition by unscrupulous parties. Unless that competition can be effectually wiped out, such complaints as have of late been addressed to us by several correspondents are not likely to escape the need for repetition. It is only, as we have said, by quite a crushing influence being brought to bear, that the sale of inferior and impure teas which has brought our produce into comparative disrepute can be altogether stopped. disrepute can be altogether stopped.

We think therefore that, valuable as this new agency is likely to prove, its establishment ought not to induce our planting community to slacken their efforts to effect such a desired combination as we have referred to. It will be seen from what our London correspondent writes that, as with previously formed agencies, it is the intention to practically limit its sale, so far as the primary efforts of the Association goes, to those of the produce of particular estates. When that sale passes the limits of the of particular estates. When that sale passes the limits of the producing powers of those particular estates, recourse will have to be made to purchase in the open market to make up the deficiency of supply. To ensure that purchases so made shall be of corresponding quality to that of the produce of the estates concerned, it must manifestly be necessary to ensure that the concerned, it must manifestly be necessary to ensure that the agents employed are not alone perfectly honest, but also entirely competent. Human nature being but what it is, we are driven to ask ourselves the question whether such insurance can invariably be guaranteed? Even a single failure to obtain those qualities may altogether undo all or nearly all the good the Ceylon Tea Growers' Company may on other occasions have effected.

Now, if the whole body, or the larger proportion, of Ceylon Tea Estates was represented by a Syndicate entirely representing their interests, it is scarcely within the bounds of probability that any demand would be in excess of the guaranteed supply by men who would have a direct personal interest in the quality of the supplies. In fact the interest which, in the case of the Ceylon Tea Growers' Company, is centered in comparatively a few individuals, would be extended to a representative body so large and so influential that shortcomings such as we have of late and so influential that shortcomings such as we have of late had reason to complain of could scarcely be dreaded. Under had reason to complain of could scarcely be creaced. Under no circumstances hardly—in such a case—would resort have to be had to promiscuous purchases in the open market. Such a course, as we have pointed out, is always likely to prove the weak-point in the armour of those who are acting as private individuals only. We wish the new concern every possible success, and appreciate the efforts and intentions of those who have devised it and are bringing it to a practical issue. But nevertheless do we feel that it is scarcely by such an agency, or by any multiplication of such agencies, that the peculiar needs of by any multiplication of such agencies, that the peculiar needs of Ceylon Tea Ristate proprietors can be met. We have alone and specially noticed the Ceylon Tea Growers'

We have alone and specially noticed the Ceylon Tea Growers Company, because it seems to some extent to be a rival to the proposed syndicate, though on a much narrower basis; lut this Company is by no means the only one affecting our teas of which the present mail has brought us information. We have, besides, the prospectus of "The Ceylon Pure Produce Company, Limited"

(£20,000 in 4,000 shares of £5 each), with such well-known names on the list of directors as Messrs. Dobree, R. W. Forbes, John Hamilton, J. H. Boberts (S. Rucker and Co.), and C. J. Scott. "This Company is formed," says the prospectus, "for the purpose of supplying the public with pure and genuine Ceylon tea, and to combine with it also the sale of pure coffee." Further

"The intention is to open a central depot or warehouse in London, and, as opportunities offer, to establish branch depots or agencies in different parts of London and the provincial towns. agencies in different parts of London and the provincial towns, and to adopt all the necessary sources and means for publicity. It is intended to make the entire purchases in the London market from all the importations as brought forward. In adopting this course continued uniformity of each description sold by the Company can thus be ensured, instead of depending always and solely on any particular estate, the quality from which may vary season by season. No other than deylon tea will be bought or sold by the Company. It would be premature to form any calculation as to the quantity of tea likely to pass through the Company's sources of disposal, but estimating the amount at only a quarter of a million of pounds weight, the profit would amply Company's sources of disposal, but estimating the amount at only a quarter of a million of pounds weight, the profit would amply justify the expectation of a very good dividend. The sale of coffee also should produce very satisfactory results."

Then our advertising columns have for some time shown that the "Direct Tea Supply Association of India and China (Limited)" claims the attention of Ceylon planters, having forty agencies for the delivery of tea direct to consumers. This mail, too, has brought us interesting information respecting the "tea" work of Mr. Pineo in America; of Mr. MacCombie Murray who is on his way thither—there is plenty of room for a dozen independent promoters in the United States—and of Messrs. Shand, Haldane and Co. in London. The last-named firm deal only in Ceylon teas and coffees and supplies asylums, hospitals, and charitable institutions at actual cost price, and lay themselves out on all sides not so much for large gain as a large connection. Apart from all not so much for large gain as a large connection. Apart from all these agencies, and from Messrs. Buchanan Bois and Co. started locally, we learn that several other Ceyson Tea Companies are incubating in London, so that after all we begin to think there may be no room for the syndicate in the old country; but certainly it could do much good in America and Australasia.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS IN BURMA. (Bombay Gazette.)

A good deal has happened in Burma since General White, whowas then in command of the Field Force, wrote the report on the military situation which has a place in the recently issued Bluebook. Before a month had passed the Government of India had resolved upon a considerable augmentation of the force of fourteen thousand men which at the time garrisoned Upper Burma, and upon the despatch of Sir Herbert Macpherson to direct operations whose importance was destined to correspondingly increase. The reinforcements have in the interval got into position; Sir Herbert Macpherson has died, and the Commander-in-Chief of India has taken his place. New measures and new men therefore have come upon the scene, and yet there is much in General White's reports which has relation to a situation which does not, after all, sogreatly differ to-day from that of four months ago. The back of greatly differ to-day from that of four months ago. The back of the revolt is not broken to-day, notwithstanding that there are now thirty thousand troops where in July there were less than half that number. General Roberts, whatever his plans may be, must needs work upon the results of General White's experience that "the most effective way of establishing our rule in Upper Burma and at the same time protecting and gaining touch of the villagers, is a close occupation of the disturbed districts by military posts." He will still have to deal with the fact upon which further experience has been based, "how rapidly and secretly strong bodies of insurgents, numbering sometimes from two thousand to four thousand men, can be assembled in the neighbourthousand to four thousand men, can be assembled in the neighbour-hoods not protected by posts." Nor has much yet happened, except the visible growth of our numerical strength in the country, and the cutting down of the Myentzein Prince and of the leader Hlao Oo, to make nervous villagers sufficiently conscious of our power to make it seem worth while for them to throw in their lot with us. There has been no change in this respect since General White wrote his report, though we suspect that it would no longer be easy for those people with impunity to "make terms with leaders, and baffle pursuit of these leaders by roundabout guidance or systematic silence." A leaf from the note-book of the German Intelligence Department in the war of 1870 would help General Roberts to overcome that difficulty—a difficulty, for the rest, which he would overcome at least as readily as most of his contemporaries. General White's report bears new testimony to the long since discovered truth that in Burma we have had to to the long since discovered truth that in Burma we have had to learn wisdom by experience. We set out upon the enterprise in the belief that cavalry were not wanted, and hence there were scarcely more than three hundred horse in an expedition of ten thousand men. Yet this was not entirely a military mistake. It was consequent upon the policy to which at that time the Government of India had restricted their intentions. Seeing that General Prendergast's instructions were to go to Mandalay, dethrone King Theebaw, and hold the line of the Irrawaddy, there was little need, if the operations could have been kept within the narrow limits, for even that small force of cavalry. It was only when the undertaking grew in our hands in a manner that the Government of India had not foreseen that the inadequacy of the force, both in number and in composition, revealed itself. The operations of the campaign, General White says, have falsified the supposition that cavalry is a useless arm in Upper Burms, and the subsequent despatch of nearly three thousand cavalry to the country is the sign of an awakening to the truth. General White's reference to the moral effect of cavalry upon the enemy recalls a passage in Prescott's "Conquest of Mexico," in which we are told of the terror with which the presence of about thirty horsemen amongst Cortez' troops inspired the Aztecs. The Burmese have, we are told, the greatest dread of them. "In a land where only ponies are bred the cavalry horses seem monsters to the people, and the long reach and short shrift of the lance paralyse them with fear." It ought not to have been necessary to wait until more than half a year after the march to Mandalay before realising this; but it was because the original plan of the campaign contemplated only a march to Mandalay that no provision was made for acting upon it. The cavalry under General Roberte's orders are ample for the purpose for which they have been sent. If we hear little of their achievements thus far, it is doubtless because the season most favourable for cavalry operations has not set in. It will begin early in March, when the crops are cut, and the ground is dry, and movement will be easiest, though General White says they can do good service from December.

AN ANGLO-INDIAN CELEBRITY. (Delhi Gazette.)

Lately, at Agra, the grave closed over the earthly remains of one who was a representative man of his day. Leycester Septimus Beddy was essentially a self-made cetebrity, and for the last dozen years of his life his name was a household word in most districts of the N.W.P. as the famous criminal lawyer of Agra. The Native community regarded "Beddy Saheb "a champion in the eye of the law quite as formidable as "Our only General" is in other quarters. Mr. Beddy was descended from a stock that has unhappily become extinct; that of men of sterling worth and force of character who came out to India in the ranks of the British Army to push their fortunes there, and succeeded not only in making a position for themselves, but what is of far more importance, in rearing a race of hardy sons to follow in their footsteps. Had he lived, the father of the subject of this notice would have seen another son at the head of one of the finest regiments of the Bengal Army, than which no spectacle can be more gratifying to an old soldier. Beddy Septimus tried many professions before he settled down to the law. In early life he belonged to the P.W.D., before it had bloomed into the well paid profession it is at present; then he was Manager of a Canal Navigation Company, and afterwards tried his hand at making and working cotton presses. Of a restless and active temperament, the pressure of stern necessity drove him to do whatever he could find to be done, and he had long practised the law more as an amateur than an expert before he finally settled down to it as a profession. His first introduction to it was under circumstances so singular that we cannot forbear to give them here at full length. So far back as 1856, a civil engineer in weak health had chartered a palanqueen at Agra to carry him to Naini Tal. The article was supplied by a dawk contractor, who also furnished the bearers, and the arrangement entered into was that the palanqueen should be made over to the contractor's agent at Naini Tal. This was done, but the engineer u which civil justice was administered at Agra in 1861.

The man who made his first introduction to the law in the above fashion afterwards succeeded in earning an income approaching that of a district judge, but he soon discovered that the Criminal, and not Civil, Law was his forte. He is said to have learned the Codes by heart. Be that as it may, there were few cases of importance in the districts adjoining Agra in which he was not engaged. That he should have been able to tread the difficult and dangerous paths of the Criminal Law without ever coming under the lash of the High Court is a proof that he thoroughly knew his profession. He could tell strange tales of innocent men being hanged by mistake and of murderers escaping justice, and probably there was no man living who knew the darker side of the Native character so well.

Generous to a fault, he took no care of the ample income he enjoyed, and up to the day of his death he sowed and planted and built with the zest of a man to whom work is the one thing needful to existence. We have sometimes thought that he mistook his profession, and that under happier auspices he might have developed into a skilful mechanical engineer. His bent was in that direction, and if he could have enjoyed the converse of other minds of a similar type, his originality would have manifested itself by works or discoveries of usefulness. The energy that he threw into the defence of criminals might have found a more genial atmosphere amid the whir of wheels and the progress of the arts which tend to lift men above incentives to crime. Such was not to be, and the subject of our notice leaves a place in his profession difficult to fill, but a family not nearly so well provided for as could be wished. Of his sons, one wears a barrister's gown, and the other is a cavalry officer famous for sporting proclivities The energy of the old stock is still preserved in the owner of Blitz, a sufficient answer to those who hold the theory that Anglo-Indians, born and bred, must deteriorate morally and physically!

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT. (Madras Mail.)

There is much which is very suggestive in the memorial from the People's Association of Tirupati to the Governor in Council. Tirupati is a town of 13,000 inhabitants, of importance only as a holy place of pilgrimage. The Mahunt, or trustee of the great temple, maintains a High School, a Sanskrit College, and a Dispensary. The North Arcot Local Fund Board has hitherto maintained the roads, conserved the streets, aided primary education, provided for public vaccination, and generally supplied such sanitary and other wants as a place so circumstanced needs. There has been no suggestion of dissatisfaction on either side. The people have not complained that the measure of civilisation hitherto vouchsafed them was insufficient; the Local Fund Board has not complained that the burden of Tirupati was greater than it could bear. A cers of one anna per rupee of land revenue on payers of such revenue was the sum total of taxation which the Local Fund administration demanded; and the Local Fund accounts showed an annual surplus. No argument of necessity, therefore, called for any change. But Tirupati has fallen a prey to Local Self-Government in its acutest form. From the commencement of the current official year it has been constituted a Municipality. Six months of advanced civilisation have proved sufficient for the people of Tirupati, and many points in their petition to be freed from its blessings are instructive.

There is, first, the history of the Municipal inception. The Collector assembled the inhabitants, and said now nice a Municipality would be, and some of the people said "Yea," to please him. When the Collector was gone, cooler deliberation, free from the awe of the great man's presence, prompted the people to address the Government, and attempts were made, in petitions and telegrams, to meet the impending calamity. But it was too late. There had been a request for local self-Government, and local self Government the people should have, and have it to the full. It is not the fault of the Government that the good folk of Tirupati do not seem to like it. It is cruel on the leaders of Native aspirations that their pet symbol of freedom and advancement should be viewed, as the people of Tirupati view it, as an instrument of oppression and impoverishment. But it is their own more civilised brethren that these good people have to thank for the form of Government now thrust upon them. The Tirupati memorial admirably illustrates the hollowness of the whole agitation for local self-Government. It is not an agitation of the people. To the people, self-Government means, as the Tirupati memorial depicts in detail, taxes on houses, taxes on occupations, taxes on vehicles, takes on animals, tolks, license fees, and the tender mercies of unscrapulous menials armed with a brief authority. Sir M. E. Graut Duff's observation on this point, in his Review Minute, does not go far enough. The mistake is not merely, as it suffices his Excellency to state, to suppose that the zeal for local self-Government is as yet very burning; the mistake is to suppose that it exists at all as a real national feeling, or to imagine that, with the bulk of the people, it is looked upon otherwise than as a calamity.

The Tirupati case is not the only case in point. Nothing is now more common in the Mofussil than complaints of Municipal oppression and Municipal mismanagement. It is no answer to say that this is not the fault of local self-government, but of the men who administer it. The rejoinder is that self-government is premature until the people are advanced enough to administer it efficiently; and there is a general feeling gaining ground, to which such protests as that from Tirupati give support, that the Madras Government has been going too fast in the matter. The number of District Municipalities has been rapidly increased from forty-seven to fifty-five. The principle has been to thrust self-government upon the people. The assumption has been that towns, or, rather, villages, of a certain population are prepared for its reception. Institutions adapted to cities and commercial centres, where independent unofficial opinin has some weight, have been applied to rural villages, where, as occurred at Tirupati, opinion bows "to please the Collector." The idea of thrusting Municipal institutions upon such places was a new departure. The old Act, XXVI. of 1850—the first of the Municipal series—could only be introduced anywhere if the inhabitants desired to have it. It was very little used. The next plan was to aid voluntary associations with Government grants, and some six or seven such associations were formed Act X. of 1865 went further, though still maintaining the principle of grants-in-aid, and had its origin in the belief that the inhabitants of towns were not contributing their fair share to the general revenues of the country. The desire of the inhabitants to have this Act applied was no longer the only, or even the main, consideration, and its introduction met with great disfavour. The Administration Report of 1868 69 recorded that "except at Vellore and Cuddalore, where some slight disturbances occurred, the merchants having closed their shops, the Act has been worked without overt resistance being experienced." There was something pathetic in this satisfaction that the general resistance of the people to self-Government had not been greater. But the Government of the day sought a remedy in more self Government, and Act. III. of 1874 has amplified. Elections, it was believed, "ould popularise self-Government. Lord Hotart, in his Minute on the Act of 1871, expounded a sound principle in saying that "government with the consent of the people is better than government without it;" and it is for the present Government to ask itself if such instances as that of Tirupati can be said to come under the category of government with the people's consent.

It is a curious reflection on the belief that the extension of Municipalities would be popularised by an improved elective system of appointing Municipal Councillors, to find the Tirupati memorialists saying that, "the introduction of the Municipality was itself a hardship, but the rigour with which the Councillors set themselves to work has doubled, and even trebled that hardship." And if the District Municipalities in this Presidency were polled, there is little doubt that relf-Government with consent, which is the only legitinate form of self-Government, would go to the wall. It is hard to justify the imposition of a Municipality on such a place as Tirupati, or, indeed, on any village of the kind. The poverty of the place is, as the memorialists say, a sufficient objection in itself; and ordinary common-sense revolts at the ideas of costly Municipal institutions ever having been intended for petry places of this description. The Tirupati people have not been the first, as they say, to ask for the abolition of a Municipality. The Municipalities of Cumbum, Gooty, and Palacondah have, in past years, been abolished. Tirupati is in no respect better adapted than these places were to the reception of high-class self-Government; and, with such precedents before them, no fear of odium need deter Government from a retrograde movement. But even if this step is not taken, such protests from self-governed places should convince the Government that it is going too fast. If People's Associations and the like are to be of any use in averting a form of Government which nauseates them, wheir endeavours should be directed to stopping the mouths of those agitators among their countrymen in deference to whose noisy demands self-Government is being thrust upon an unwilling people.

BENGAL.

IT is understood that Mr. C. H. Reily, barrister, who has returned to Calcutta from leave, will be appointed Chief Presidency Magistrate substantive protem. Mr. Leith will continue to officiate as assistant Secretary to the Bengal Legislative Council.

AT a meeting of the Calcutta Town Council, the chairman proposed that the question of celebrating in an appropriate manner the Jubilee of Her Majesty's reign be taken into consideration. It was resolved that the Municipality ought to take the lead in the matter, but that it ought to invite other public bodies and associations in Calcutta to co-operate with it; and, if these hodies concurred, that a public meeting ought to be called in the Town Hall to enable the general public to participate in the arrangements. The chairman was, therefore, requested to place himself in communication with the chief public bodies and associations in Calcutta, to ascertain their views, and, if possible to arrange a preliminary meeting, in order to prepare suitable proposals to lay before a public meeting. It was also resolved that the chairman should address the local Government, and ask that one and the same day might be fixed for the celebration, in all the provinces under the Lieutenant-Governor, or, if possible on all India, as there seemed to be a general feeling that the 20th of June, being in the middle of the hottest month of the year, when the metropolis is most empty, would be an unsuitable date.

MADRAS.

Ms. P. S. RAMASAWMY Moodelliar, C.I.E, dubssh of Messrs. Arbuthnet and Company, is the first native Sheriff of Madrae.

The salary attached to the office of Sheriff is Re. 650 to Rs. 750 a month, but it is expected that a Bill will shortly be introduced into the Viceregal Legislative Council for the purpose of converting the appointment into an honorary one, and thereby effecting a saving of about Rs. 8,000 per annum. The elimination of its stipendary character will tend to enhance the dignity of the appointment in public estimation.

About one thousand coolies are at work day and night at the breach on the Madras Railway between Pudi and Tirupati, but it is said that it will take some time before the breach is restored, two arches of a long bridge having been washed away. The bridge is situated at a distance from Madras of eighty-one miles, this side of Tirupati. Since Sunday first and second-class passengers are transhipped over the breach on planks, while third-class passengers are dropped on their way up near the breach, and on their way down at Tirupati, whence they have to find their own way across. The Railway Mail Service have undertaken, on their own responsibility, to convey the mails acrose, and on Monday the Bombay mails reached the Central Station at 8.20 a.m.—two hours late.

EDUCATION appears to be making satisfactory progress in Mysorc, where, at the end of last year there were 2,237 schools with 57,530 pupils. Of these schools 1,148 were Government-aided, and 1,089 unaided, 43,343 pupils attending the former (of whom 4,743 are girls), and 14,290 the latter. The schools of the civil and military stations at Bangalore, which number altogether 127, with 6,210 pupils, are not included in the above lists. There were formerly six schools, with 273 pupils, which gave a special education in engineering, medicine, and botany, but these have now been abandoned, and a system of scholarships has been introduced to enable graduates of art to take the course of training in these subjects at the Medical Colleges in Madras and Bombay, the Agricultural College at Saidapet, the College of Science at Poona, and the School of Forestry at Dehra. The only technical education now given in the State is to a limited number of youths at the State Railway workshops, to whom a certain number of scholarships are awarded. As regards female education, the principal school is the Maharani's girls' school, which is entirely under Native management and confined to high caste girls, and has a numerous staff of both European and Native teachers, while music is one of the branches in which the pupils are carefully instructed. There would be, it appears, a still more rapid expansion of the schools and the number of pupils, were it not for the fact that a large proportion of the funds for providing school premises and keeping them in repair has to be found by the municipalities, which are unable to bear any increased expenditure in this direction.

Punjab Trade.—The last year's report of the foreign trade of the Punjab with countries across the frontier shows that the total trade had been greater than in the two previous years, and is so far encouraging, more especially as the commerce with Kashmir, the most important of the factors of Punjab trade, had been considerably checked by the death of the late Maharaja. Two important products of Kashmir, shawls and raw silk, in both of which the late ruler took a marked interest, had fallen consider, ably. With Kabul, on the other hand, which carries on almost as much trade as Kashmir, and more than nine times as much as any of the other countries with which the Punjab trades directly, a very satisfactory increase is shown, especially in the exports from that province. It is upon these that the prosperity of a country mainly depends, and therefore Kabul must be looked to in the future as the best customer of the Punjab. Indian cotton piece-goods, Kohat salt and wheat are the three items in the account which give the most favourable balance.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT RAWAL PINDI.—It appears that ten or twelve Non-Commissioned Officers were down at the range practising for the Duke of Connaught's prize. The party were lying on the ground with their carbines in front of them, waiting until the markers had repainted the target, when, through some at present unaccountable mistake, Corporal Steel, who was one of the number, forgetting that his carbine was loaded, commenced, it is surmised, taking sights at the target, and unthinkingly pulled the trigger. The carbine went off and the bullet struck Private Callingham, one of the markers, on the right side, and came out right through his heart on the left, striking the bull's eye on the target. The unfortunate man fell dead upon the spot. There were two other markers in front of the target at the time. Corporal Steel was at once made a prisoner, and a Court of Inquiry, is, it is said, to be held to determine whether the sad affair was the result of accident or carelessness.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE VICEROY AND THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

The Rast Goftar says that the Viceroy, in replying to the most sober and civil address presented to him by the Sarvajanik Sabha of Poona, availed himself of the opportunity to state the policy of Government on two most important matters. The first important statement made by him was with regard to the Civil Service Commission, which should be considered as satisfactory, and one which ought at least for the present to be accepted as likely to remove all misapprehension in the matter. It is the bounden duty of the public to accept the Viceroy's explanation, and do their very best to make the Commission a success. The second statement made by the Viceroy was with regard to the proposed abolition of the Deccan College, in which he promised that he would give his very best attention to the subject as soon as the report of the Finance Committee will be submitted to his Government.

The Kaisar-i-Hind says that, however strong a case may be made out by the witnesses examined by the Commission, it will be in the hands of the members of the Commission to draw their own inferences therefrom. It is natural that in drawing such inferences men are apt to give way to certain predicctions and prejudices in the matter. The explanation given by the Viceroy for his not being able to appoint a Parsee on the Commission is not satisfactory. The Viceroy has dealt an effective blow at the Native public writers in Bengal, who have been misrepresenting the aims and objects of the Commission.

The Native Opinion says:—In his reply to the Sarvajanik Sabha's address on this subject his Excellency was pleased to take to task the Native Press on our side for uncharitable "insinuations" on their part in regard to the number of Native members on the Commission and the aims and objects of the proposed inquiry. It may be that the writings of some of the Native Press have overstepped the bounds of judicial exactitude, but that may, perhaps, be the result of a want of proper and intelligent information, the timely supply of which could possibly have avoided all irritation and blundering on their part. We have often adverted to Government secrecy on matters which most vitally concern the interests of the Native public, but their attitude in this and similar other matters has been so acutely persistent that every effort of the kind has proved quite ineffectual, and hence the origin of the so-called misrepresentations. We are persuaded to think that Lord Dufferin's castigation is rather too severe, inasmuch as the frequency of the testimony of the Anglo-Indian Press on our side as to the judicious conduct of the Native Press on the whole in all matters of public importance is enough to convince every fair mind of their loyal attitude towards the powers that be. If there has ever been any back-slidings on their part it is the result of a want of full information, which Government would have done well to place at their disposal, rather than to tax them for perverse desire to misrepresent their action.

The Indian Spectator says:—Lord Dufferin's visit to Poona has been signalised by an important declaration of principles and action. In replying to the address of the Poona Sarvajanik Sabha, his Excellency glanced at the prospects of Local Self-Government and of high education, and vindicated the policy of the British Government in India with an earnestness to which Native audiences are but little accustomed. To the question of the Public Service Commission his Lordship addressed himself with a warmth not at all in keeping with the diplomatic character with which he has been so abundantly credited. The whole speech is alive with thoughts that breathe and words that burn, and we trust that this unburthening of a troubled soul may bring relief to itself and restore clear vision to those on whose perception partly depends the weal or woe of a great Empire. For the rest, we have only to commend this eloquent vindication to the public, having already anticipated it in more ways than one.

The Dakka Gazette says:—From the Government Resolution it appears that hints have been given to close the door for the admission of Natives into the real Civil Service. The people of this country do not ask for favour, but they want equal rights and privileges. Let the limit of age be raised. There is no necessity for effecting a change in the statutory Civil Service. If there are any appointments for which Natives are unfitted, let Englishmen be brought out to fill them. There is no necessity for any race distinction in the Civil Service.

The Indian Union says:—We believe we have now pretty clearly shown that no alteration or improvement of the Statutory Service will solve the problem which lies before Lord Dufferin. Nor will the creation of any new service do it. What will satisfactorily solve the problem is the old remedy which the people have cried for ever since the competition system was introduced—that is, the making that examination a door for Natives of India, as it is for Europeans, and not a bar, as it has hithertalways been for them. This and this alone can solve the problem.

The Indu Prakash says:—Altogether the speech is a very important and valuable exposition of the policy of the Government, and is certainly the best speech Lord Dufferin has delivered since his arrival in India. Valuable as it is to the public generally, it is especially valuable to the Native Press. Apart from the correction of the particular error on the subject of the Commission, it teaches an important lesson to the Press. It holds out an encouragement of future success. It gives ample testimony to the fact that the Press has made itself a power in the country, and that its voice is regarded by Government. It gives a further warning that if this power and regard are to be preserved, the Press must take care not to make reckless statements or criticism. If it is to earn the respect and confidence of Government, it must be moderate and fair, and must, above all, be truthful and accurate. It is in its own power to preserve or lose the high position it has gained. Lord Ripon said as much in his reply to the address which the Native editors presented to him before his departure from these shores, and Lord Dufferin's speech conveys the same idea. Such incidents as its attitude on the question of Public Service Commission will not, we hope, occur again, and we trust it will not fail to profit by the rebuke administered to it by Lord Dufferin.

THE QUEEN has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of? the Rev. Dr. Anton Tien's "Manual of Colloquial Arabic," which is dedicated to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge in remembrance of Crimean days.

The chief Mahomedan Association of Delhi, called the Anjumani-Rishedeen, called a meeting of the leading Mussulmans, and unanimously adopted a petition to his Highness the Nizam, the purport of which was telegraphed both to his Highness and his Minister. The said telegram is as under:—"We, the Musulman inhabitants of Delhi are extremely sorry to learn that your Highness is displeased with your Minister. Considering his father's devotion to your Highness's august person, and to those of your forefathers, and considering his transcendent services to your kingdom, we respectfully pray, in the interest of Mussulmandom, that your Highness will pardon your Minister in the presence of the Viceroy, and thus set an example of Moslem magnanimity before the world as befits your Highness, for your Highness is the head of all the Mussulmans of India. We have despatched a petition to the same effect to your Highness's address by post, bearing five hundred signatures. A copy has been forwarded to his excellency the Minister, praying that he would ask pardon of his august master before his Excellency the Viceroy, though he might have committed no fault in his own opinion. We pray to God, in the interest of the first Mussulman State in India, that this disagreement will be settled a nicably."

EXPLORING AND TRAVELLING.*

The first entrance of any one to the Bay of Rio de Janeiro forms an era in his existence.

"An hour

Whence he may date thenceforward and for ever."

Thus writes an enthusiastic traveller; and, according to Mr. Wells, the view is so superb as well to deserve such a gush of enthusiasm. "The scene is grand in form, rich in colour, a veritable dream of wonderland, a subject that a Turner would delight in, and well worth a voyage (especially a pleasant one) from England to see." Such is the enticing and seductive first glimpse which the regions of Brazil present; but the attraction is but an ignis fatuus which lures to destruction. The Bay of Rio is a veritable "will o' the wisp" to the traveller whose heart beats quick, whose aspirations rise high as he pictures what glories of earth, water, and sky must be concealed behind the exquisite hills which form the background to this, perhaps, the most lovely bay in the world.

So far as scenery is concerned the first impressions are not destined to disappointment. From one end to the other of Mr. Wells's two massive volumes, there are indications that Brazil landscapes are magnificent in the highest degree. The richness of vegetation, the beauty of the views, the radiance of the sun, the pureness of the atmosphere, the gloriousness of the tint, the wild profusion of flora, these one and all stand forth incomwild profusion of nora, these one and all stand forth incomparable and beyond description. But there is another side to the picture. First, the climate is damp to a degree which is truly terrible; in early morning a cold mist rises which completely drenches everything. Rugs, clothes, wraps of every or any description are powerless against this cold damp, clammy companion de voyage, and the day begins with a "dry at the fire." Then frequently follows a deluge of rain to control with which a tent is quently follows a deluge of rain, to contend with which a tent is absolutely powerless; and the camping-ground, unless placed on a rising ground, becomes in a tew minutes a "young river," and it is difficult to find a single dry corner; so all the occupants huddle together, and legs of mud are thrust into backs of a like composition, by which means human beings become ere long animated masses of sticky, glutinous, viscous soil.

This is much to endure, but it is not by any means the most distressing affliction in this singularly unenviable land. insects would bear favourable comparison with the awful plague of these worrying creatures which befel the hapless Egyptians when they oppressed the Children of Israel. First and foremost there are mosquitoes—not by ones, twos, or threes, but by countless myriads. To avoid their attacks is hopelessly impossible; one and one remedy alone is efficacious—to burn cow-dung in the tent, the fumes of ammonia being so distasteful to these bloodthirsty midnight assassins that even the unusual luxury of real live English flesh cannot induce them to keep to the attack; but the fumes are equally disagreeable to the victim, who has to choose between semi-suffication or total scarification—truly an enchanting choice. That the horrors of these insects are by no means insignificant may be gathered from the circumstance that at times people bury themselves up to their neck in the sand so as to defy the malignant and torturing efforts of this fee to the human race! Then there are endless other pests—some noxious, others innocent, but all vexatious: huge cockroaches, odoriferous and innumerable, literally blacken with their numbers everything within reach; ants crawl over the body till the latter literally quivers with irritation; tiny creatures burrow under the skin, and blotches and blains testify to the long suffering endurance of beings who need be descendants of the patient, long-suffering Job. To all these pains and aches must be added the danger of snakes, some deadly, but all loathsome, which wind round legs of tables, ropes of hammocks, and any place where there is a locus standi for this species of vermin. To escape troubles a heedless traveller might be tempted to plunge into the delightful looking water of a neighbouring stream, when instantly countless denizens of the river resent the intrusion, and snais and bites from enraged mousters warn you that this is no abiding place for a luckless wanderer. So rushing out again to terra firma the poor disconsolate voyager sits and smokes the pipe of peace at the door of his tent, basking negro-fashion in the gluttering sun, when in a moment the pipe begins mysteriously to wabble in his teeth—a hint, and something more, that a fever is at hand. Then comes a fit of icy-cold, followed in a few minutes by burning heat, and, let it he hoped ultimate vacagery. Thenkful an attempt is made let it be hoped, ultimate recovery. Thankful, an attempt is made to note in the journal that all is well; but the body is weak, and perspiration pours off the skin in such volumes that the paper is saturated, and the effort is abandoned in despair.

In such circumstances Mr. Wells must have been blessed with the temperament of Mark Tapley, to endure all, to suffer all, and enjoy ali. That the country has a potentiality of future greatness is doubtless conceivable, when it is remembered that at present it is populated by an indolent, careless, indifferent race, who live but for existence, who work but as a necessity to appease the pangs of hunger, who are utterly devoid of ambition, and whose motto is, "Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die." But it will need a plentiful supply of immigrants, able and prepared to cope with many difficulties; and it may be questioned whether Mr. Wells's valuable and trustworthy account of Brazil will induce many settlers to let fungus grow on their boots as they sit at rest in their tents, or lead many Mark Tapleys to try by experience what is better left to imagination. But this is no fault of the author, who has given a plain, unvarnished, and interesting account of a country which is but little known to Europeans, and of which thousands of acres have as yet been free from the footstep of the white man.

THE WHITE CHIEF OF THE CAFFRES.*

General Drayson tells the story of a stripling born in India. and wrecked on the African shores near Natal during a voyage to England. Of the few who survived the perils of the sea only the women of the party and the child in question were destined to save their lives, for the ruthless asseguies of the Caffres soon put an end alike to their hopes and their sufferings. After a considerable amount of discussion the tribe resolve to spare the lad in question, who soon began to display such skill and activity in the national pastimes that he attracted attention in high places— when, too, he constructed a trap, and caught a leopard therein, he was at once promoted to the dignity of a ruler of men. Hence-forward he appears as the "White Chief of the Caffres." The volume under review gives an account of his life and actions during the years he lived amongst his adopted people. Adventures, hair-breadth escapes, dangers, difficulties, teem on every page—not a line but what will be read with avidity by young folks always on the watch for books of pluck and daring. Seldom has a more fascinating work been presented to the public, and General Drayson may be warmly congratulated as a successful caterer for boyish readers; while, too, those who are anxious to glean information anent the Caffres and the Zulus—whose deeds of prowess brought disaster upon British arms, and disgrace upon those in high places—may pick up a vast amount of minutize regarding races but little known to the generality of Edglishmen.

CHRISTMAS BOOKS+

"Just One More Tale," consisting of a series of stories very prettily written, will most deservedly be a favourite with young folks; while should their elders, as is often the case, be doomed to read them about to the juvenile members of the family there will be no weary yawns or half-suppressed objurgations. The volume is in every way attractive, and should be particularly acceptable at the gay and festive season now at hand.

"My Birthday Present" comprises several very pretty tales alike amusing and instructive. When all are good it would be invidious—perhaps impossible—to select. Apart, too, from the merits of the stories the cover of this volume is so artistic and beautiful that on this account alone, as a present, it would be sure to be welcome.

Jessamine and Her Lesson Book" tells the tale of a "wee child "who, disliking lessons, conceives the novel expedient of of burying her books in the ground. The punishment was one or burying ner books in the ground. The punishment was one month's enforced idleness, the result of which was an ennui of leisure, followed by eventual habits of industry. For young children the volume is entirely suitable.

"The Little Rick Burners" is a moral tale of the Miss Edgeworth school. That it is well written, interesting, and instructi worth school. That it is well written, interesting, and instructive is another way of saying that its authoress is Charlotte M. Yonge. Why it bears a title which links it with incendiarism is children's privilege to discover. As a Christmas present for youthful hopefuls in the nursery it may well be recommended.

"A Child's Pilgrimage" consists of a sweet series of allegorical stories, simply but feelingly told; and if some are tinged with a touch of melancholy, others, on the other hand, are light and full of life. Children will have but one complaint—the tales are too few and too short.

SKETCHES FROM MY LIFE.‡

In the third decade of the present century a youngster joined the Royal Navy as a cadet. He had been but a few hours on board ere he was ordered to the masthead to please the tyrant who commanded the vessel. From that day to the hour of his death the perils and dangers which commenced in the hazardous duty thus assigned to the stripling of thirteen summers, appear to have dogged the steps of Hobart Pasha, an outline of whose career has recently been presented to the public—and what a career! Ere out of his teens he had seconded a brother officer in a duel; then, after a while, we find him doing a little fighting on his own account—woman, levely woman, being, of course, at the bottom of both these adventures, or misadventures; but these were but "extras," just to give a "fillip up" to life in the midst of dangers alike by sea and land, which would have contented any ordinary mortal. Then followed a series of exploits in cupturing slavers, of which it will suffice to say that Captain Hobart suring stavers, or which it will suffice to say that Captain Hobart came well out of all the deeds of daring which he chronicles.

But the pages which will occasion most interest are unquestionably those which chronicle the "blockade running" during the American War. There was then plenty and to spare of dash, da ger, and devilry, and many a heart will beat high as hair-breadth escapes and clever naval ruses proclaim the plucky commander to have been no ordinary Englishman. As to his career as Hobart Pasha, the admiral in charge of the Turkich wessels of war it Hobart Pasha, the admiral in charge of the Turkish vessels of war, it wil suffice to say that in this position he acquitted himself with such sagacity, determination, courage, and success that had he not been hampered with jealousies in high places he would not ampossibly have placed a very different complexion upon the Russo-Turkish war, which affords the late Lord Beaconsfield one of his greatest diplomatic triumphs.

But readers, especially lads just entering the arena of life, must judge for themselves as to the merits of this volume, which, unless we are much mistaken, they will pronounce to be one of the "jolliest things" of the season; and it is the more desirable a story-book, because it contains no stories. All is true, and yet section would be puzzled to invent more thrilling adventure, or more exciting heroism.

INDIA REVISITED: ITS SOCIAL AND POLITICAL PROBLEMS.*

Mr. Smith has "spoken some," to use a Yankee phrase. His inspiration seems in the main to come from Native sources. Surely no one independently informed would, for instance, tell us (p. 29) that Native graduates are the best exponents of the aspirations of educated India. The writer admits, with commendable frankness, that, in endeavouring to state both sides of the case fully, he may have fallen into apparent inconsistency. For this no candid critic would blame one who avows himself a tyro in matters Indian. But it is difficult to understand how even such an one can tell us in one breath (pp. 35-6) that Indian candidates for the Civil Service ought to pass some time in England, and that (p. 32) by holding examinations in India for that service, ""the youth of India would not have the enormous disadvantage "the youth of India would not have the enormous disadvantage of crossing the seas, contrary to the teaching of the Hindoo religion." We may remind Mr. Snith that religions are usually the result of gradual development and accretion, and that the prohibition to cross the black water is as little an essential part of the Hindu "religion" as are Sati, child-marriage, and compulsory widowhood.† (We suppose such slips must be pardoned in a man who, when writing of the adherents of the Prophet, speaks of them as Musulmen.) On the whole, however, Mr. Smith is to be congratulated on having, while avoiding the Scylla of aversion change as such, steered clear of the Charybdis of desiring change for its own sake. If his suggestions are not original, they are. for its own sake. If his suggestions are not original, they are, an some degree, reasonable; and the tone of his essay is that of an observant and thoughtful writer, dabbling at the solution of problems, to cope with which needs a lifetime of study and India Council Remittances.—The better feeling in the Silver and Eastern Exchange Markets which prevailed early in the week enabled the India Council to dispose of the whole twenty lacs of bills offered on Wednesday last. The price, too, was a favourable one, and the allotment was a more normal one than we have witnessed for a long time past. Seventeen and ahalf lacs had been specially sold the day or two previously at improving rates, and as much as 1s. 5\frac{1}{2}d. was obtained for bills at the official allotment, the bulk being placed at 1-321. below that figure. As a result the Indian Banks advanced their buying rates for documentary bills \frac{1}{2}d. per rupee, viz., to 1s. 7-16J. for thirty day bills, and business could be arranged at this figure up to the end of February next. Since Wednesday, Indian exchanges have rather wavered, and forward business has been less easy to effect at the current rates. One reason for the easier tone of the last pay or two in both exchange and silver is the notification that an INDIA COUNCIL REMITTANCES .- The better feeling in the Silver pay or two in both exchange and silver is the notification that an pay or two in both exchange and silver is the notification that an increased amount by ten lacs will be offered by the Council on Wednesday. Only twice this financial year has so large (!) an amount as thirty lacs been offered, a fact which testifies to the change produced in the market by the depreciation in the price of silver. By far the busiest period of the financial year, however, has yet to come, and an increase in the drawings of the Council in December is quite a normal movement. The Secretary of State's reply to the memorial of the Calcutte Trades' Associated of State's reply to the memorial of the Calcutta Trades' Association on the subject of the sale of Government drafts has been published in Calcutta. #### INDIA AND ITS TRADE.

The paper read by Dr. George Watt, C.I.E., before the Royal Colonial Institute, on Tuesday last, is one which ought to be in the hands of all Members of Parliament, Philanthropists, and others who take, or pretend to take, an interest in India, with a view to the development of her resources, and to the well-being and happiness of her peoples. No one here or in India itself could have been better fitted for the task he undertook than Dr. Watt himself, who brought to his subject the result of laborious research, thoughtful study, and a catholic sympathy unfettered by political partisanship or passion. Dr. Watt would make India rich, prosperous, and happy through the wise development of her great resources under the wise and enlightened rule of England. The saying that India is the brightest gem in the British crown is a hackneyed one now, although it still holds favour amongst the pseudo-philanthropists and stump orators who wish or pretend to pose as representatives of the feelings and aspirations of the people of that country. If these gentlemen would only study Dr. Watt's able paper they would gain a practical insight into the true method of being of that real use to their Aryan brethren which they declare to be the object of their heart's desire. India is to be benefited in the future by the best and most attractive handmaidens of all nations-Trade and Commerce. Her real wants are not local self-governments or Native representation in the British Parliament, but a wise and honest encouragement in the development of that prolific wealth which Dr. Watt shows she has at her command. Such a paper as that listened to by so many representatives of Colonial industries the other evening will do more for India than all the oratory which, at home or in the East, has lately been exerted for the purpose of agitation for foolish if not for selfish ends. We regret that the limits of our space have permitted us to give only a portion of Dr. Watt's remarks, but the portion we have selected gives a fair sample of the exhaustive way in which the subject has been treated. There was a little in the introductory part of his lecture upon which Anglo-Indians who had made use of their knowledge and experience of the East did not require to be informed, but Dr. Watt did wisely before the mixed audience whom he had to address to "begin at the beginning," and to tell his hearers what sort of place India was with regard to situation, climate, soil, &c., for we fear that the general British public knows as little of India today as it did twenty years ago. Happily the facilities of travel are bringing Bombay closer to Pall-Mall, and it may be, ere long, that a tour in India will be considered as much a necessary part of an English gentleman's education as the Grand tour used to be considered in the days of our forefathers. Only it is to be hoped that the travellers will return with widened and not narrower views, and that they will see that the advancement of India in moral and material progress depends upon the proper development of her magnificent resources, and not upon the encouragement of political agitations fostered for mere purposes of "Party"—that "madness of the many for the gain of a few."

The loading of transport animals will be constantly practised on parade, and Brigadiers-General and officers commanding posts will institute the strictest inquiry into all cas a where the transport animals show signs of neglect or improper loading. Every effort should be made to reduce the number of night sentries. Occasional patrols at uncertain hours may often be employed instead of night sentries. General officers are directed to satisfy themselves that the number of centries is the lowest possible at all posts. lowest possible at all posts.

PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—The chairman (Mr. Thomas Sutherland, M.P.), in moving the adoption of the report, stated that, exclusive of vessels being c nstructed, the company's fleet, which would be completed next year, would amount to 200,000 tons, which would have cost the company nearly £6,000,000 sterling, so that they might claim to be by far the largest corporation engaged in shipping under the Britisn flag. The board had entered into contracts for the construction of four large new vessels. During the mail contract of the last seven years the company had laid down 82 000 tons, at a cost of £2,260,000. They had expended in renewals between £500,000 and £600,000. Altogether, in the seven years they had expended in rew ships and improvements in old ones £2,800,000, or about £400,000 per annum. That fact would dispel the idea of some persons that mail services could be carried on without cost. With reference to the company's mail contracts, he said that they had been successful in securing the contract for carrying the China and India mails for ten years, from 1888. True, it was taken at almost half the amount they-received twelve years ago, which was £500,000; but the reduced cost of coal and other materials and the changes induced him to think their contract would be successful commercially. The business of the company had increased so far as the increased number of passengers carried; but the receipts therefrom had been less because of the large number of return tickets. The company had suffered to the extent of £18,000 by the great fall in exchange during the past twelve months.

THE TRADE OF INDIA AND ITS FUTURE DEVELOP-

A most interesting and valuable paper on the above important subject was read on Tuesday last at the meeting of the Royal Colonial Institute by Dr. George Watt, C.I.E., lately in charge of the Economic Court of the Indian Section at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition.

The chair was taken by General Sir H. C. B. Daubeney, G.C.B., a Member of the Council.

countries which each exceed in value at least one million pounds sterling, and aggregate sixty-three million, out of a total of eighty-five million pounds. Of these exports, three are manufactured goods—viz., cotton yarns, jute manufactures, and dressed and tanned skins. Of the remainder, only hides have to be excluded from the designation agricultural produce, which must be applied to the other cleven great staples of Indian export trade. These may be here enumerated in the order of their respective values:—Cotton, opium, rice, wheat, linseed, jute, tea, indigo, rape sccd, til seed, and coffee.

"The fewness of the articles of Indian trade may at the very outset be admitted to be a source of great weakness, more especially when the paucity is mainly of manufactures. Nearly all the minor manufactures which, as a rule, are made in each great country for at least its own use, have, in the case of India, to be imported. At the same time, the simplicity of the export trade has favoured the growth of great and rich merchants, to the exclusion of the competing masses of smaller men, who as a exclusion of the competing masses of smaller men, who, as a rule, have so much to say to the growth of minor industries."

We regret that we have not space to give the whole of the paper under the different headings into which it was divided; but we give part, but not the least important part, of it.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES OF THE PROVINCES OF INDIA.

The total area of India has been determined to be 1,382,624 square miles, and the population 253,891,821. This gives a density per square mile of 184, but if the less densely-peopled tracts are excluded, the density of the better known parts of the country will be arrived at. Thus the North-West Provinces have 403, Bengal 360, and Behar 506.

Bengal.—The total area of the "Lower Provinces" is 193,198 square miles. It is thus larger than Spain, and has a population as great as that of France and the United Kingdom taken together. The staple food of the people is rice, and of this there are annually cultivated about 37,500,000 acres. Millets are little grown, but during the cold season a considerable amount of oil seeds are cultivated, chiefly linseed, rape, castor oil, and til seed (Sesamum indicum). It tas been reported that last year there were over 2,000,000 acres under oil seeds and 850,000 acres under wheat. This cereal is rarely, if ever, eaten by the people, so that it is cultivated purely to meet the export market. The pulses and lentils are largely grown, and form an important article of food. It has been determined that there were last year 8,000,000 acres under these leguminous seeds. Sugar-cane is grown in many parts of the country, about 350,000 acres being annually under that crop, but sugar to a very large extent is also obtained from the date-palm (Phænix sylvestris)

The hot, damp character of Bengal is peculiarly favourable to the cultivation of rice, three principal crops being obtained—namely, the aús crop in July to October, the áman in September to January, and the boro in April and May. Of fibrous plants jute is the most valuable; last year there 800,000 acres under this crop and tabledy in Featern Bengal Lo. Behar and jute is the most valuable; last year there 800,000 acres under this crop, and ichicfly in Eastern Bengal. In Behar and Chuita Nagpur cotton is grown (300,000 acres), and in Eastern Bengal hemp occurs, but it is cultivated exclusively for the purpose of the manufacture of the narcotic ganja, from which Government obtains a revenue of about £200,000. The indigo industry has almost left Bengal proper, having moved into Behar, where, 1,300,000 acres are annually under this tinctorial crop. The safflower, once an important agricultural product of the eastern districts, has disappeared entirely, owing to the introduction of aniline. Bengal is the agricultural product of the eastern districts, has disappeared entirely, owing to the introduction of aniline. Bengal is the great tobacco producing province of India, there having been last year 200,000 acres under that crop. Madras stands next to Bengal in tobacco cultivation, having 82,000 acres. It seems, however, that the bulk of Bengal tobacco is badly curved, being dirty, too hard pressed, and burdened with heavy, used a leaf stalks. It goes mainly to Burma, where it appears to be extensively employed by the Burmans in the manufacture of Burma cigars. Madias tobacco is of a better quality, and is now finding a market in in the manufacture of Burma cigars. Madias tobacco is of a better quality, and is now finding a market in Europe both in the raw state and in the form of Trichinopoly cigars. The moist nature of Bengal naturally favours the idea of tea cultivation upon the lower slopes of the hills, both on the Himélara and the mountaits of Chutia Nagpur. There are of the cultivation upon the lower slopes of the fills, both on the Himálaya and the mountairs of Chutia Nagpur. There are over 50,000 acres under tea, with 3,000 acres under cinchona.

There are the principal a ticles cultivated in Bengal. With the extension of railway communication the trade of the province has greatly improved, but that it is capable of still further extension is shown by the fact that there are immense tracts of land unpulsivated.

Assam has an area of 1,477,451 acres under cultivation, and 1,662,280 acres under forest, with 11,495,794 acres uncultivated, the bulk of which is suitable for cultivation. The staple food the bulk of which is suitable for cultivation. The staple food of the people is rice, and last year there were 1,070,390 acres under that crop, with 47,507 acres under millets and Indian coin. With some of the hill tribes, such as the Torkhul Nagas of Manipur, Job's tears (Coyx lachrima) is an article of food, whereas in Chutia Nagpur it is never cultivated, but, on the contrary, is viewed as an objectionable weed. Oil seeds were last year cultivated to the extent of 146,837 acres. Tea is the most valuable crop of Assam and Cachar; of this there were last year 189,852 acres. From the forests are also derived indiarubber and wild silks. The eri, or castor oil leaf feeding silkworm, is perhaps one of the most promising new articles of trade. The ecocons one of the most promising new articles of trade. The cocoons cannot be economically reeled, but they are now carded and spun, and accordingly find a distinct market. The eri silk has many advantages over most of the other silkworms. It is a native of India, is multivoltine, i.e., has four or five distinct breeding times, and it feeds upon an annual plant which may be sown three or four times every year. These are recommendations that have only to be fully made known to place eri silk on a fixed commercial basis. At present the supply is practically drawn from wild sources, and that, too, from the mountain slopes of Assam, where labour is excessively expensive. The insect and plant both thrive successfully in Eastern Bengal, and before long it seems certain European plantations will be opened out that will yield an unfailing supply of eri silk while earning an additional harvest from castor

In Burma the staple crop is also rice. Last year there were 3,630,340 acres under this cereal. It is remarkable that the bulk of the foreign exports of rice go from Burma, while Bengal is the most important rice-producing country. It may be here added that rice and opium are the only articles of Indian export trade which cannot be a made to have a data and because the secondary. Since here Rice has which are made to bear a duty on leaving the country. to bear close upon 15 per cent., a duty which practically pre-cludes it from becoming an article of fcod with the peoper people of Europe. This heavy duty is by some writers justified on the ground that as rice monopolises more than three-quarters of the soil of Lower Burma, a duty levied upon the exports will come to bear more equitably upon the land than any other form of taxation.

In addition to rice, ttak wood and cutch are valuable exports from Burma. The recent advance of the British to Upper Burma has now thrown an immensely larger region than Lower Burma under the administration of the Government of India. This newly acquired territory possesses perfectly distinct features, and will come to afford many new products, besides opening up the trade with a portion of China. Even in Lower Burma, however, there are immense tracts of very fertile land for which there are no cultivators. The total area cultivated was, last year, 4,300,356 acres, but, according to the survey, there are 24,017,083 acres of land available for cultivation, with 25,237,459 acres not available,

Madras.—In the Southern Presidency there are 26,994,669 acres annually cultivated, of which 5,546,191 are artificially irrigated. There are, in addition, 10,600,707 acres available for cultivation, and 11,101,192 not available, with 8,980,725 acres of forest. and pulses are by far the most important crops; of these there were, last year, 12,877,978 acres with, in addition, 5,630,106 acres of rice, and 30,946 wheat. Oil seeds, more especially castor oil seeds, ground nuts, and cocoa-nut oil, were largely cultivated, there having been 1,169,079 acres under these crops. Cotton is an important crop in Madras, 1,326,718 acres were cultivated with it. Indigo, also largely occurs being prepared in dry leaf (321,339 acres) crop in Madras, 1,326,718 acres were cultivated with it. Indigo, also, largely occurs, being prepared in dry leaf (321,339 acres). Madras and Mysore are the coffee-producing regions of India. Just as the coffee planters of Ceylon are substituting tea for coffee, so the South Indian planters are extending their acreage of coffee, and it may confidently be affirmed that with learned of coffee, and it may confidently be affirmed that with lessened competition, and the higher prices ruling at present, the coffee industry of South India has a hopeful future before it. In addition to 48,813 acres of sugar-cane, Madras annually derives a large amount of its sugar from the Palmyra-palm (Borassus flabelliformis).

In Bombay there were last year 17,761,275 acres under millets and pulses, and these are, and have always been, the food stuffs of a supplementations of these were last year the people; but to supplement these there were last year 2,031,304 acres of rice, and 2,211,459 acres of wheat. Cotton occupied 2,156,763 acres, and tobacco 75,000 acres. Cotton, oil seeds, and wheat are the three great articles of Bombay expect the country of port trade, and last year there were 1,976,867 acres under oilseeds, chiefly linseed and rape seed. A very large amount of the exports of these three products returned as shipped from Bombay must, however, be viewed as derived from the Central Provinces, and Central India, and not from the Bombay Presidency. According to the survey there are over 6,737,000 acres of land available still for cultivation in Bombay together with 8,905,437 acres declared as not evitable for bay, together with 8,905,437 acres declared as not suitable for cultivation. Should a greater demand, therefore, arise for Bombay produce, the ploughman has plenty of room for the exercise of

In the North-West Provinces, 19,897,475 acres are annually under millets and pulses, and these form the food stuffs of the great bulk of the population. The rich are able to eat rice and wheat, and of the former there were last year 4,894,344 acres, and of the latter 5,031,330 acres. These Provinces may be viewed as the headquarters of the sugar-cane cultivation of India, and last year there were 817,326 acres under that crop. Only 623,298 acres were under oil seeds, but 1,677,049 acres yielded a crop of acres were under on seeds, but 1,671,049 acres yielded a crop of cotton. Tea and tobacco, to a small extent, are cultivated in these provinces, and 410,921 acres were under indigo. There remains to be cultivated 7,474,708 acres.

In the Central Provinces there are annually 4,299,000 acres under pulses and millets, and 3,541,467 under wheat, with, in addition, 3,091,625 acres under rice. As in the other Northern Provinces the millets form the steel and this is unally Provinces, the millets form the staple food, and this is supplemented with pulses, wheat, or rice. Oil seeds, and especially linseed, constitute an important article of trade. Last year there were 1,632,822 acres under these seeds. The white variety of linseed raised in these provinces was much appreciated by the experts who visited the late Exhibition. Cotton is of course cultivated, and there were last year 459,349 acres under this crop. There are still 7,864,320 acres available for cultivation; 12,851,840 acres of forest lands, with 6,018,342 waste lands.

In the Berars there were last year 2,646,513 acres of millets and pulses; 819,057 acres of wheat, and 21,784 acres of rice. Guton is, of course, the most important article of trade, and last year there were 1,959,402 acres under that fibre with 842,955 acres of oil seeds. In spite of this extensive cultivation there were last year 808,749 acres available for cultivation, 2,375,354 acres of waste lands, with 672,258 acres of forest.

In the Punjab to a large extent the staple food of the people may be said to be wheat; indeed this is the only province where may be said to be wheat; indeed this is the only province where wheat deserves to be placed as a food of the people. Last year there were 7,819,509 acres under wheat, and 621,214 under rice, with 13,084,232 under millets and pulses. Although wheat has always been eaten by the people of the Punjab, the millets and pulses hold their own, and must be viewed as largely the food stuffs of the poorer people. Last year 1,061,618 acres were under oil seeds, 335,454 under sugar-cane, 792,996 under cotton, and 153,889 under indige. 153,889 under indigo.

The above very brief accounts of the leading agricultural products of the more important provinces of India may serve to give some idea of the distribution of the articles of Indian export trade. Care has been taken to try and give the areas under each crop, and the amounts of land declared by the Survey Department as still available for cultivation. Roughly speaking, there are over 100,000,000 acres waiting cultivation, and 120,000,000 acres viewed as waste lands. From these facts it will be readily gathered that India has by no means reached the point of its utmost cultivation. If more wheat be required by Europe, India will be able to meet the demand. It would, however, be hopeless to expect much expansion of that trade in Bengal or Madras, since but limited tracts of these provinces possess the requisite climate. So, in a like manner, with all the other crops, to utilise the available land it is essentially necessary that a due regard be paid to the physical features of the regions where it is contemplated, to extend cultivation. cultivation.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE INTERNAL TRADE OF INDIA.

It is difficult to arrive at a definite idea of the extent of the internal trade of India, i.e., the inter-provincial trade in home manufactures and produce. India may not inaptly be described as in the transition from being an Oriental and passing into a Europeanised country. Native industries, Native habits and customs have been greatly disturbed or obliterated, and at present only a small proportion of the European industries have been established which should ultimately come to take the place of the older ones. Why, for example, should India export its oil seeds? older ones. It is perfectly possible to prepare from these the oil, and thus retain in India the oil-cake, either as a cattle food or as a valuable manure. Last year India had actually to import oil to the value of over £961,000 sterling. The bulk of this doubtless consisted of kerosine oil from the United States (£693,661), but of the balance two items may be mentioned, £49,275 worth of vegetable oil imported from the United Kingdom, and £29,959 worth of cocoa-nut oil from Ceylon. It would thus seem clear that a great reform might be effected by the opening out of oil-mills in

It is surprising that India should have to import close upon £2,000,000 worth of iron ore, pig iron, wrought iron, angle iron and bolts, wires, hoops, nails, and screws. Mr. Medlicott reports: Few countries in the world can have a more abundant supply of pure iron ores; and in old times iron-smelting was common all pure iron ores; and in old times iron-smelting was common all over the Peninsula, and Indian steel was famous. The manufacture is now well nigh extinguished by the cheaper product of wholesale methods. In connection with the coal-fields and with the extension of railways there is no doubt that these methods might now be profitably started in Inda." Why does India not manufacture its own glass? The materials necessary exist in great abundance. The growing trade in European pottery might easily be met by Indian-made goods, and Mes rs. Burn and Co.'s admirable examples of this shown at the late Exhibition may be admirable examples of this, shown at the late Exhibition, may be admirable examples of this, shown at the late Exhibition, may be taken as a foretaste of the future.

Last year India imported £861,318 worth of chemicals, drugs and dre stuffs. The bulk of there could easily enough be manufactured in the country, such, for example, as alum, £24,807; arsenic, £1,773; sulphuric acid, £18,207; quinine, £44,453. On the other hand, it is difficult to understand such imports as indigo from Persia and the Straits Settlements to the relies of £25,200; marghologies from Carlon to the value of value of £2,530; myrabolams, from Csylon, to the value of £2,194; manjit, from Persia, to the value of £20,203 (the plant is wild all over the hills of India); and saffron, from France, to the value of £44,594 (the plant is wild in Kashmir and other parts of the Western Himalaya, and might be cultivated to any extent). It is difficult to understand such imports, but they indicate how much remains to be done before the resources of India can be said to be fully developed. There are always, of course, great difficulties to be contended with in efforts to alter trade channels. Witness, for example, the fact that, in spite of the tea planters' efforts, India imported last year 4,005,637lbs. of China tea, valued at £30,425. This came mainly into Bombay, and a large amount of it was doubtless intended for the Afghanistan and Persian market; but still it must not be forgotten that the freight from Assam to Bombay would most probably be greater than from China to Bombay. The heavy railway freight in tea, as in wheat and other Indian products, is a serious drawback. The rate per mile is exceptionally low, but the distances are so great as to kill any product that has to be carried for several hundred miles.

The list of articles which might be grown or manufactured in India instead of being imported from other countries might be indefinitely multiplied. Why, for example, does India not manufacture its own soap and candles? There is one soap factory in existence, but there might be many more. Why does India require to import lucifer matches, beads, and umbrillas? These are just the very articles the Natives of India could make, if the modern appliances and machinery could only be established. Coir matting and basket work could be greatly extended, and a most useful industry might be opened up in lace manufacture. Of lace and patent net India imported last year £56,562 worth, mainly from the United Kingdom. With a little encouragement, India might easily come to export lace to Europe. The imports of beer have greatly diminished since breweries have been opened up in India, but there are doubtless many other parts of the Himalaya, besides Kashmir, where wine-growing might be attempted. Hops to the value of £38,417 worth were last year imported into India, while India could, and doubtless will, in the not very distant future, meet its own requirements in this direction.

Tobacco seems certain to take a much better position in the future than it has done in the past. The leaf, as presently cured, has many defects, and the cigars are too hard-packed for the European market, and they are heavy, and the amount of moisture they contain is not carefully enough regulated. All these defects increase the duty the tobacco has to bear.

The greatest faith may be put in the advantage to India of opening out manufactures in the thousand and one little articles. which have at present to be imported from other countries. This which have at present to be imported from other countries. This action would effectually provide for the patient workmen who are steadily being thrown out of employment through competition with improved methods of production. It may be an open question how far the responsibility of encouraging and protecting such industries devolves upon the State. But it would seem the more natural course to accept change as a necessity of civilisation, and to encourage modern industries, rather than to strive to resisting of and support those primitive systems which were the admiration of the world before the discovery of steam.

PERJURY BY A BANKER.

The managing partner of Messrs. Ramnath Baijnath and Company, a well-known banking firm in Cawnpore, has got into trouble in connection with a joint-stock company which he started, and is to be put on his trial for perjury. The circumstances which have led to his prosecution are related as follows in the Pioneer:—

led to his prosecution are related as follows in the Pioneer:—
Some three years ago this gentleman, along with several other wealthy Natives of Cawnpore, conceived the project of starting a cotton ginning company in that town. This in itself was a perfectly feasible and possibly lucrative project had it been taken in hand in the proper manner; but this was not done. A company, called the Cawnpore Cotton Ginning Company, Limited, was started with a nominal capital of one lakh in 1,000 shares of Rs. 100 each. No manager with a knowledge of the business or the working of companies was engaged, nor does a proper prospectus seem to have been issued. At any rate the shales hung fire, and only when one of the promoters had gone round among fire, and only when one of the promoters had gone round among his friends could anyone be persuaded to take them up. Even then the shareholders do not appear to have been regularly registered. The share money was collected with the greatest difficulty, but by the aid of a mortgage the mill was completed and equipped. Lt ran for about a year; but practically no business was done, the self-constituted directors and managers being chiefly occupied in holding meetings and dunning shareholders. It seems that at about the end of the year an extraordinary general meeting was called to make arrangements for taking up the remaining share capital. Then came the liquidation, and in the course of his investigations the official liquidator came upon evidence which seemed to show that the managing partner of Messrs. Ramnath investigations the official liquidator came upon evidence which seemed to show that the managing partner of Messrs. Ramnath Baijnath and Company was a large debtor of the company, there being witnesses who swore that he had taken up shares for the company and subsequently disposed of them at a discount. This, however, the manager denied, and the District Judge has committed him for trial on a charge of perjury. No one, of course, can say how the trial will result; but the circumstances leading up to it should be a lesson that no joint-stock speculation should be engaged in unless there is a reasonable prospect of the capital being forthcoming, and unless proper steps are taken to secure that result by the regular election of directors, the appointment of a competent manager, and the proper registration of shareholders.

Judgment has been delivered at Cawnpore in the case in which Jungi Lal, managing partner of the firm of Ramnath Baijnath, bankers, was tried for perjury. Colonel Cowie, the Cantonment Magistrate, has sentenced him to three months' imprisonment. No expense had been spared in the defence, which was onducted by Messre. Colvin and Alston, barristers of Allahabad, Mr. Rushton, barrister of Agra, and Mr. W. K. Eddis, solicitor of Calcutta, besides several local pleaders. The prosecution was in the hands of Mr. Roberts, the Government Pleader, assisted by Mr. Strachey, the attorney for the liquidation of the Cawnpore Cotton Ginning Company. An appeal against the above sentence Cotton Ginning Company. An appeal against the above sent is filed, and every effort will be made to quash the conviction. An appeal against the above sentence

ALL who have lived in India and have received either from England or one of the Presidency towns articles packed in card boxes can easily remember many losses and disappointments owing to the damaged state in which the contents were so often found in consequence of the boxes having been broken in transit. This breakage was not from rough usage, but from the effect of climate, the damp heat of the Plains melting the glue, paste, or whatever substance was used to hold the corners of the boxes together. All this danger has now been remedied by an excessively ingenious but simple method introduced by the "United Kingdom Patent Metal-edged Box Company," who have purchased the patents of the inventors, Mr. Jean Scherbel and Theodor Remus, of Dresden, Savana, According to this inventors the corners are secured by Saxony. According to this invention the corners are secured by metal edges, and what were the weakest parts in the older kind of boxes are by this process made the strongest. These boxes are practically unbre-kable, and for sample-post, book-post, or parcel-post are chearer, stronger, and more serviceable than any other. post are chearer, stronger, and more serviceacie than any other. In sending at this or any other season presents to friends in India care should be taken that the articles be packed in these metaledged boxes only.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.) ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 23, 1470

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

.... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster

SIR HENRY RAEBURN, R.A.

With Portraits and Appendix by his Great-Grandson, WILLIAM RAEBURN ANDREW.

Even to look and handle this volume is an enjoyment—nor is the fair ext rnal promise believed by its contents. This brief memoir of the most eminent Scottish portrait painter is agreeably and profitable reading.—IVhitehall Review.

Watenati Review.

This book is the first separate "Life of Raeburn," and besides being a good sketch of his career as far as it goes, cont. ins a list of his works exhibited in Edinburgh in 1876.—Contemporary Review.

Mr. Andrew writes about "the Raynolds of the North" with all that zealous warmth of appreciation which is due from a Seotchman to a Seotchman, a warmth which grows still more fervid when its object is an ancestor.

—Attenum.

Mr. Andrew does in the second seco

Mr. Andrew does justice to the manliness and amiability of Raeburn's character, and gives us some delightful glimpses of his intercourse with many of the great Scotsmen of his time.—Scotsman.

BROAD / ARROW

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE. ESTABLISHED 1883.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A sories of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its corre-pondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette irrulates largely throughout. India and the Colonies

ments."
"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marino bureaux of the Frensh, Russian, and other Government, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armic, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng'and regarding Military affairs.

"VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian veople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs. Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

. THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 3rd December; from Allahabad and Madras to the 1st December; and from Calcutta to the 30th November.

THE news from Upper Burma is not very startling, but it indicates that Sir Frederick Roberts is gradually putting his plans in operation. Several encounters with discoits are reported, but our casualties have not been serious.

THE expedition to the Ruby Mines is meeting with considerable opposition. There has been seven days' continuous skirmishing with decoits, but the column is still advancing.

Five more Native Infantry regiments have been asked for by the Commander-in-Chief, and allowed by the Government of India, for service in Burma. One will be from Bengal, one from the Hyderabad Contingent, and three from Madras.

THE three regiments of Native Infantry ordered from Madras to Burma are the 18th, at Bellary; the 15th, at Madras; and the 27th, at Negapatam. All officers bolonging to these regiments, now on furlough, are to be recalled.

THE military force now available for the work of pacification in Upper Burma alone is fully 20,000 strong. A return furnished by General White, just before the arrival of the Commander-in-Chief at Rangoon, showed about 23,000 British and Native troops of all three armies north of our old frontier line.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS expects to be able to return to Calcutta early in January, having by that time seen the plans of the campaign well on the way to achievement.

THE percentage of sick amongst the troops in Upper Burma, so far as had been received from all reporting stations telegraphically connected with Mandalay, was a few days ago 8 per cent. amongst the Europeans, and 13 per cent. amongst the Natives; in short, over ten per cent. of the whole force is still inefficient.

A MACHINE-GUN battery, consisting of four double-barrelled Gardners on mules, has been formed at Mandalay under the command of Captain Lloyd, R.A. The Commander - in - Chief recently inspected the guns, and approved of their use with flying columns.

It is understood that the Nawab Salar Jung will retain office in Hyderabad as Minister, but that a new element will be introduced into the administration in the person of a European adviser of the Nizam.

THE report that the Finance Commission has recommended the abolition of the Madras Board of Revenue is denied. Years ago the Famine Commission recommended the abolition of the Board, but it still survives.

THE Military Committee that was appointed as a sort of irregular assistance to the Finance Committee in questions of army expenditure have, it is understood, completed their report

THERE is some prospect of Mr. A. Mackenzie, the Home Secretary, who is at present on leave, being appointed Chief Commissioner of Assam.

HIS HIGHNESS THE MAHAMAJA RANA OF DHOLEFORE is very seriously ill. Dr. Tyler, from Agra, has been summoned for a consultation.

THE Duke and Duchess of Manchester have left Bombay for Hyderabad.

THE Earl of Rosebery has had an interview with a number of members of the Bombay Presidency Association. The views of the association were expounded on many points, including the necessity of reimposing import duties on cotton goods, the enlargement of the Legislative Councils in India, the conditions of the Civil Service examinations, and various financial questions connected with the administration of the country.

THE Austrian steamer Melpomene has arrived in Calcutta with twenty-three dead Mahomedan pilgrims, who died from fright and injuries received while the vessel was in a cyclone off the Madras coast.

THE Bombay Town Council have voted a grant of Rs. 5,000 for the technical education scheme.

THE sentence in the Gibbon's case has been remitted by the Supreme Government. The matter was referred to the High Court Judges, who advised the Government to adopt that course.

A SEVERE shock of earthquake was felt again in Cashmere on the 12th ult.

A CORRESPONDENT writes from Kashmir, that Dewan Luchman Dass, the Governor, was recently wounded by a bear, while out bear shooting. The animal was, however, we are informed, killed, and the Governor sately conveyed to his abode. He is expected in Jummoo from Srinagar, as well as Mr. A. Wingate, the Settlement Officer.

OBITUARY.—Mr. William Scott Forman, Bombay Civil Service, Sessions Judge of Hyderabad (Sind).

Notes of the Week.

The news brought by wire and the Overland Mail is not much this week. The Viceroy is continuing his tour, receiving many addresses, and making pleasant and appropriate speeches in reply. His reception at Pondicherry appears to have been a very enthusiastic one, and, judging from the speech made by the Governor in proposing the health of the Queen, nothing could be more satisfactory than the entente cordiale between Eugland and France in the East. Pondicherry, however, is not Paris, and feelings—even of nations—are known to change with changes of longitude and latitude.

But whilst Frenchmen and Mahomedans in India are speaking well of British rule in that country, an eminent Englishman at home has been doing his best to discredit the same. Mr. John Bright writes to "Au Indian Student"—who had sent him a copy of some juvenile opinions common amongst young Bengalis or Parsers just now—that the course which Lord Dufferin is pursuing in Burma is a renewal of the old system of crime and guilt which he evidently believes England that delights to pursue in the East. He joins with the Indian young gentleman of the crude opinions in condemning the course followed by the Viceroy.

EXTREMES meet, it might be thought, when a venerable English statesman and a dusky student of the East come together on a political platform, but Mr. Bright explains:—

There is great ignorance on the part of the public in this country, and great selfishness here and in India, as to our true interest in India. Extension of territory, new markets for our manufactures, fresh fields for promotions, with salaries and pensions and honours—all these temptations are held ou; and they are powerful, and with many irresistible. The million of India are not consulted or cared for; they bear the bursen. The result is not yet; but these departures from morality and from true statesmanship will bring about calamity, and perhaps ruin, which our children may witness and deplore. You write what is true on the Indian question, so far as I have read what you have written, and I hope your efforts may yield some good fruit.

We admit the ignorance—but it is an ignorance which the student and the "Tribune of the people" share between them. It should not be forgotten that Mr. Bright at one time was ready to re-echo the cry of "Perish India!" His solicitude about her welfare now is, perhaps, as deep as his knowledge of her real wants.

As a contrast to Mr. Bright's gloomy views about English rule in India Indian students and others might take a profitable lesson from the concluding remarks of Mr. Byramjee Dadabhoy, of Bombay, in an address delivered by him, on Thursday last, before a meeting of the East India Association at Westminster Town Hall. The speaker urged the necessity of certain reforms of an economic and administrative nature, but he also dilated on the "inestimable blessings of British rule in India," and fully recognised the success which had attended that rule. "The Natives of India," said Mr. Dadabhoy, "are happy and contented under the merciful and prudent British rule, and are conscious of the immense and solid benefit they reap from their country's connection with England."

THE appointment of Dr. W. W. Hunter to the Vice-Chancellorship of the Calcutta University has given, as we anticipated it would, general satisfaction amongst the Native community. A Bengal contemporary says:—
"There will be no second opinion as to the merits of this Dr. Hunter is the man best fitted by his intellectual attainments, his almost encyclopædic knowledge of India, his vast experience and well-known sympathy, to lead the aducational machinery of this country. We hope lead the educational machinery of this country. We hope only that his many duties will afford him the leisure to devote himself to University work. We have no doubt as to his fitness and inclinations."

THE staff appointments made by Sir Frederick Roberts in Upper Burma do not appear to please everybody—the Civil and Military Gazette of India amongst the number. That journal asserts that Sir Frederick follows the example of Lord Wolseley by attracting to himself certain officers and by keeping a close watch over their special interests. "These officers," says the complaining newspaper, "when success shines upon them and they rise by repeated promotions, are apt to be considered by outsiders as a 'ring,' and it is a most point how far this sunlike faculty for forming rings of faithful satellites acts as good or evil for the service.

The solar system works well enough in constellations; but, regarded from a human point of view, even the solar system might be mended by a little more method and regularity. In a purely mortal institution like the British Army, the grouping of lesser lights around some bright particular sun is apt to leave other worthy and deserving planets in the dark, and engender sorrow in the Pleiades and snarling from Sirius. S) it is whispered—doubtless by the disappointed Dog Star—that the sun of the British Army is about to rise above the swamps of Burma in the interests of its own "ring"; that General White, basking, deservedly enough, in the favour of the Commander-in-Chief, is to be drawn up by his presence to such altitude, that, when the storm-clouds have more or less dispersed, and the chief can return again to his duties in India, General White may be left supreme with borrowed light in Burma.

This is cleverly put, but it should be remembered that the men Wolseley attracted to him have been men whose deeds always justified his choice, and that one faculty which a Commander ought to possess is that of knowing how to choose his assistants. Napoleon possessed it in perfection, and although the Duke of Wellington was seldom allowed, owing to Parliamentary or Court influence, to use it his successors—Wolseley and Roberts have been allowed almost a carte blanche in the matter.

CALCUTTA, DEC. 19.

The Viceroy's visit to Pondicherry passed off successfully. his arrival at the station he was met by M. Manès, Governor of French India, who made a short speech, greeting in the name of the Republic the worthy representative of the great British nation, and expressing a conviction that the visit would be rich in happy results. After driving about the town, which was gaily decorated, the Viceroy was entertained at a State banquet in Government House. M. Manès, in proposing the toast of "The Queen's health," alluded to the approaching jubilee, and quoted Lord Tennyson's

"A thousand claims to reverence closed In her as Mother, Wife, and Queen."

In her as Mother, Wife, and Queen."

Lord Dufferin then asked the company to drink the health of the President of the Republic, whose qualities as a statesman, he said, as well as his private character, had earned the respect and esteem of Europe, and who, in the judgment of all political parties, had deserved well of the fatherland. Later in the evening, replying to the toast of his own health, the Viceroy expressed the pleasure which he had derived from his visit, and his regret that he was unable to prolong it. He hoped that all good fortuce might attend Pondicherry and its Governor, and said that nothing would be wanting on his part to consolidate the bonds of amity and mutual good fellowship which now marked the relations of the French and English in India. The Viceroy left Pondicherry on the same night, and arrived in Madras on Saturday. His stay at the southern capital being a private one, no ceremonies took place. The party embarked in the steamer Clive on Sunday morning, and arrived molacutta on Wednesday afternoon. The public entry into the capital was rather a tame affair. The shipping was decorated with flags, and a considerable number of persons assembled at the capital was rather a tame affair. The shipping was decorated with flags, and a considerable number of persons assembled at the landing place, but the crowds along the road to Government House were thin, and there was no great display of enthusiasm. The Public Service Commission commenced its proceedings at Lahore on Wednesday. The sitting was opened by Sir C. Aitchison, the President, who described the preliminary work already done in preparing and issuing a series of questions. The task before the Commission, he said, was one of great importance and magnitude, the responsibility was heavy, and the trust committed was very sacred. He was confident, however, that the members would pursue their inquiries with scrupulous care and impartiality. would pursue their inquiries with scrupulous care and impartiality, and that, laying aside all preconceived views and personal pre-judices, they would seek to draw from the opinions which they had to weigh, and the facts which they ascertained, those conclusions which commended themselves as best for the firm and efficient government of the Empire and the true interest of the people. The first witness examined was Mahomed Hyat Khan, who expressed his opinion that no examination for the Civil Service should be held in India, but that Natives should be required to proceed to England for examination, the age limit being raised, and the Government giving assistance to approved candidates. Several other witnesses were then examined.

For some days past the Criminal Court at Delhi has been occupied in the trying of cases arising out of the recent religious riots. Two of the principal cases—one that of a Hindoo charged with the murder of a Mahomedan, and the other that of a Mahomedan who was said to have led the attack on the Hindoo tample—ended in acquittals. The correligionists of each of the Manomedan who was said to have led the attack on the Hindoo temple—ended in acquittals. The co-religionists of each of the accused had raised funds for the defence, brought forward a host of witnesses, and otherwise displayed great sympathy and excitement. It is stated that public thanksgiving was offered in the Jumma Masjid for the acquittal of the Mahomedan. The feeling at the state of the Mahomedan of the feeling of the Mahomedan of the Maho between the two religious at Delhi is still very strained. The Hindoo traders persist in refusing to deal with the Mahomedan. Altogether the state of things in that city is far from satisfactory, and necessitates constant watchfulness on the part of the local

A serious difference has arisen between the Bengal Government and the Calcutta High Court. Some weeks ago the Government published in the official Gazette a resolution on the working of the published in the official Gazette a resolution on the working of the Police Department, in which it criticised with some severity the action of the High Court in acquitting on appeal persons convicted by the subordinate courts. The Chief Justice and the Judges have now, it is said, addressed a letter to the Supreme Government expressing in vigorous terms their opinion as to the impropriety of such criticism, and demanding that the resolution should be cancelled. It is not known whether the Viceroy will interfera interfere.

The Government of the North-West Provinces has submitted to the Supreme Government a proposal for the establishment of a university at Allahabad.

A horrible attempt at murder is reported from Dhurmsal. Surgeon-Major Oldham, of the 1st Goorkhas, some time ago dismissed a table servant, but on the man's promise to reform took him back. Last Thursday, while Dr. Oldham and his two daughters were at dinner, the servant caught the elder Miss Oldham by the hair, drew her head back, and cut her across the jaws and neck with a carving-knife. Another servant waiting at the time ran out of the room, but the younger daughter attacked the assailant, and managed to get the knife from him, her own hand being cut severely. He took another knife and attacked Dr. Oldham, and a scuffle ensued. Eventually the man was secured and handed over to the police.

BURMA.

CALCUTTA, DEC. 19. Much has been said lately as to the insufficient strength of the civil staff and police in Burma. Whatever may be thought regarding their adequacy for the duties which they have to perform, it is only fair that the facts should be known. I believe that the following figures are correct. Since March the Government has sent between 5,000 and 6,000 Punjabee and Hindostanee policemen to Upper Burma, and nearly 1,200 to Lower Burma. The Government has sanctioned the recruiting of the Indian police in Upper Burma to a total of 9,000 men. Some of these additional men are now being obtained in India, others will be drawn from the Native regiments leaving Burma in the spring. As to the Native Burmese police, the local officers are not re-stricted, and are recruiting all the good men they can get. The Burmese Native force collected numbers nearly 5,000 in Lower Burma, and the number in Upper Burma will probably be about 7,000. The idea of the Government seems to be that the Incian police should maintain order and repress violent outbreaks, while the local police should detect crime, and garrison the unhealthy posts, to which they are inured.

As to the civil staff, the average is almost six European civil officers for each district in Upper Burma, which is a much larger proportion than that in the Indian district.

The Burma Government has perpetrated what looks suspiciously like a job at Mr. Colquhoun's expense. Last February, Mr. Colquhoun was appointed a fourth-grade deputyrebriary, Mr. Colquioun was appointed a fourth-grade deputycommissioner, and the Government of India's despatch on the subject says that it was the lowest appointment that could be offered to him. Yet he is now regazetted to the same grade as a promotion, with effects from the 1st of August; the result being that he is superseded by several Bengal civilians and military officers. Having regard to the good work which Mr. Colquhoun has done in Burma, as well as his previous services, the treatment awarded to him would seem as impolitic as it is unjust awarded to him would seem as impolitic as it is unjust.

It is officially notified that any officer in the Burma com mission who passes certain examinations in the Chinese language shall receive a reward of 2,000 rupees. Officers desiring to become candidates will be granted six months' leave on full pay, which period is to be spent in study at Bhamo or in China.

LORD ROSEBERY IN BOMBAY.

(Times of India.)

No St. Andrew's Dinner has probably ever been better supported in Bombay than the dinner that took place on Tuesday evening, and as a reference to our report will show, no national dinner here has ever been attended by such illustrious guests. The speaking, as befitted the occasion, was national and patriotic, but speaking, as befitted the occasion, was national and patriotic, but still much was said that is of general interest and will be carefully studied by others than Scotchmen. It is not often that Bombay is lucky enough to listen to the utterances of a recognised party leader. Lord Randolph Churchill, though he has since amply made up for his silence, was quite dumb in India, and it is believed that Lord Rosebery was anxious to follow his example. However, he consented to come to the dinner as a silent guest, and being there, he was unable to resist the call upon him from his countrymen. The first part of his speech was light and amusing. He had, he said, been in India for a week long enough to qualify him, after the manner India for a week, long enough to qualify him, after the manner of the race of "globe-trotters," to write a book. But he struck a truer note when he told us Southrons that we really cannot "know with what interest and with what sympathy, every home in Scotland looks on this great Empire because there is hardly a home in Scotland which is not represented in India, but even in those homes, which are not so represented, there is a feeling that their blood, and their kith, and their kin have been among the great elements that have built up their country." We have only to glance down the lists of the Governors and of the Members of Council of this Presidency since the hearing of the gentury to Council of this Presidency since the beginning of the century to see what an important part Scotchmen have played in the higher administration. But all Anglo-Indians, whether English, Scotch, or Irish, must have been pleased to hear a leading member of Mr. Gladstone's last Cabinet declare that "the Empire which we have gained we mean to maintain." The late Secretary for Foreign Affairs has nothing in common with the "Perish India" school of He said, as a matter of faith rather than of experience, that though it was easy to gain the country, a more steadfast heroism will be required to maintain it. "I do not," said Lind Rosebery, "for one moment undervalue the her i.m that gained it, but the heroism and skill which wins a people is only the heroism and skill of a week or a day; but the skill and great qualities to maintain an empire must be the perpetual heritage of the race which means to exercise it. I do not mean to derogate for one moment from the memories of Plassey and the other great victories which gained us India; but we must continue to sustain the tradition of English justice and English strength, Scotch justice and Scotch strength, justice within and strength without, which should characterise an Empire such as the world has never seen; and we shall require all the traditions of character and of the courage of our country in these days of strife and jealousy and international complication to maintain it as we inherited it." This speech was greeted with tremendous cheering, and Conservative and Imperialistic as the assembly were at heart, Lord Randolph Churchill could have said nothing that would have pleased them more.

Lord Reay, our Governor, who was known in the Igreat Midlothian Campaign as Lord Rossbery's lieutenant, is also known to the Scotchmen here as well as at home as head of the great clan of Mackay. He was formally addressed by the real promoter of the festival as "Sir Donald Mackay," and the presence in the chair of a Stotchman with such an historic pedigree did much to cnair of a Scotchman with such an historic pedigree did much to render the dinner an almost unexampled success. His Lordship made a point very early in the long list of toasts by reminding us of the unexpected welcome to the Duke of Connaught at the last St. Andrew's Dinner here, and by now bidding the Duke and Duchess welcome to the Presidency, in which for some considerable period they will play a prominent part. The pith of his speech lay, however, in the idea of federation. Scotchmen, he told us, wherever they were, are "cemented and federated and united." The Scotch communities are so many links round the world. binding Scotch communities are so many links round the world, binding the different parts of the Empire together; and he proved what he said by reading friendly telegrams from the chairmen presiding over the different St. Andrew's Dinners in the various Indian centres. If all Scotch Liberals were as patriotic as Lord Rosebery and Lord Reay were at the Scotch Dinner, their foreign and colonial policy would leave little or nothing to be desired. In another speech Lord Resy paid a well-deserved compliment to the army, "I believe," he said, "that there is no army in the world from which so much is required as from the English army, and no army which has such complex and difficult questions to deal with as the English army. The responsibility of those who have to direct the various branches and departments of the British army, and, in India, I may especially mention the Commissariat and Transport Departments, is such that grave as are British army, and, in India, I may especially mention the Commissariat and Transport Departments, is such that grave as are the responsibilities of civil government I am very glad I am not responsible for those departments." General Heathcote paid a soldier-like tribute to the bravery of Scotch soldiers. Captain Lloyd, R.N., following the example of Lord Charles Beresford, asked for faster ships ins:ead of "mud barrels." The Duke of Manchester, having served in the army, the militia and the volunteers, paved the way for Colonel Bayley, whose devotion to the cause of voluntearing led him to be loudly applauded. Colonel Bayley, who as a Judge of the High Court is himself a bright example, pointed out the necessity of every Englishman in this country being trained to arms. This was brought very forcibly home to all of us, at a time when the Russian difficulty on the Afghan fronticr seemed almost insurmountable, and we hope Colonel Bayley may succeed in rendering the Bombay Volunteer Reserve an actual, instead of as at present a mythical, body of men. They exist on paper somewhere, and in view of the events transpiring elsewhere, and of what Lord Rosebery called "these days of strife and jealousy and international complications," the list of citizens anxious to serve the Empire should be taken from its pigeon-hole.

The Hon. Mr. Forbes Adam gave a charming description of Scotch scenery, never perhaps to be so thoroughly appreciated as amongst the monotonous palm trees, and under the cloudless sky of a tropical country. The very mention of her "grand mountains and green hills, the shady glen, the purple heather and shaggy wood, the rushing torrent and the locks now lashed into fury by the blasts of winter, now sleeping in the hot haze of a summer sun; in her music melodious and soul-stirring, of which we have had so splendid an example to-night; and last, but not least, greatest in the wondrous witchery, and soft fascinating graces of her fair daughters," must have reminded every Scotchman present of his youth. And not the Scotchmen only. The baggipes that wakened the echoes of the Town Hall may, perhaps, have appealed most powerfully to those accustomed to their soul-stirring and melodious music. But that eloquent Irishman, Mr. Justice West, who proposed the poetry and literature of Scotland, showed us what a living influence the literature of Scotland had had on his own early youth. In proposing the Bench and the Bar, Dr. Peterson took an opportunity that may never occur again of advocating a Nofury by the blasts of winter, now sleeping in the hot haze of a youth. In proposing the Bench and the Bar, Dr. Peterson took an opportunity that may never occur again of advocating a No-attendance-on-the-Jury-League, a body that would have many elements of popularity locally in spite of its Irish origin. Mr. Justice Birdwood, though he gave no encouragement to this promising scheme, had a few timely words to say of the "bolt from out the blue" that was lately delivered against the High Court. There were unfortunately no Scotchmen just then on the Bonch, but our English Judges had with Lord Rosebery termed "the traditions of Scottish justice and strength," and the cheers with which the toast of the Bench was received and with which especially the name of the absent Chief Justice was greeted showed what a strong hold the High Court has and must always have upon the Anglo-Indian community. Mr. Inversity, like the other speakers at that late hour, made a sacrifice to brevity. The last historical St. Andrew's Dinner in Bombay was in 1879. But it has been eclipsed by the Dinner of 1886, and for this success the Scotch community and their greats are indebted at only to the presence of munity and their guests are indebted not only to the presence of Lord Reay and Lord Rossbery, but to the indefatigable and patriotic efforts of those good Scotchmen the Hon. Mr. Forbes Adam, and the Honorary Secretary to the Dinner Committee, Mr. John Marshall.

MR. ALLAN O. HUME. (Times of India.)

We object to an Englishman and an ex-official who pretends to be a Native agitator, and we decline to accept his utterances as Frankenstein, the creation of his own fancy, and not nearly so formidable a bogey as seems in all carnestness to believe. If he has a message to deliver, let him, as a contemporary said the other day, stand forth for "what he is in broad cloth and breeches, and not come masquerading before us here in dhoti, chadar, and chapkan." Mr. Hume may have his own views on Theosophy, Vegetarianism, and Politics. Let him expound them in his own name, and we shall know what they are worth. But it is neither fair of him nor of the two or three Englishmen who hang on to the hem of his garment to pretend that he is a Native of the Natives and the very embodiment of Indian aspiration. He is nothing of the kind. He is an idle Englishman, an ex-Civilian, drawing a good pension, and trying after many curious experiences a new experiment for passing the time and keeping himself en evidence. He may be thoroughly honest. He has been weak enough to believe in so many curious things that he very likely believes in himself.

Mr. Hume, to abandon the mask that has already been torn from him tells us that "any man who, having studied mankind and learned aright the lessons of the past, really acquaints himself with all that is going on in India, may safely assert that, unless changes are made in existing form of the administration, an appeal to force by the people of this country is not far distant." We should, however, say that no matter what his honesty of purpose and his devotion to the pursuit of wills o'the wisp Mr. Hume is the very last may who would be appulled and the distribution of will be considered. last man who would be popularly credited with having studied mankind to any purpose, or having learned aright the lessons of the past. His insine devotion to Theosophy stamps him as an impracticable man, whose opinions on mundane affairs are utterly and entirely worthless. To dabble in Black Magic, to believe in the transmigration of tea-cups and in the powers of an elderly Russian lady to give vitality and an awful presence to a bundle of rags and whalebone is not the training best suited for a practical politician. Mr. Hume may assure us that he no longer trusts in Koot Hoomi, and that he has lost confidence in the authenticity of the wonderful messages that came straight down from the mysterious brethren of the Himalayas whenever Madame Blavatsky gave "a free and easy" in Madras. We shall be glad to hear it; and we shall hope in time to hear him say that he was as much mistaken in his extraordinary political terrors. But simply because he has proved himself an extremely gullible person we must decline to accept him as an authority upon any matter of grave importance, and at his time of life it is scarcely discourteous to suggest that he is not likely to grow wiscr with advancing years. To-day, as at any time during the last seven or eight years, we must decline to take him seriously. There is, at all events, nothing in his long letter to convince us that he has given the political problems of the day any more thought than he formerly gave to Theosophy. His arguments as to the future seem to be as puerile as his follies in the past. He evidently reads his history of the world with as much zest as he formally read "Isis Unveiled," and with about as much or as little profit. All but Mr. Hume are blind That is his latest "fad." We stand on the brink of "a coming national outbreak." The whole basement storey is smouldering and unless Mr. Hume gate his own way the whole place much coming national outbreak." The whole basement storey is smouldering, and unless Mr. Hume gets his own way the whole place must sooner or later burst into flames. How does he know this, when the impending catastrophe is, he owns, hiddeneven from the most enlightened Natives? Because he has studied the lessons of the French Revolution. We would ask him to go a little further and study the stirring literature that preceded that Revolution, and say candidly if he can find any parallel to it just now in India? For Rousseau and Voltaire and the Encyclopedists we have—well we have Mr. Hume! And Mr. Hume only obtains a hearing when pretends to be a Native patriot full of the burning wrongs of his pretends to be a Native patriot full of the burning wrongs of his down-trodden country. There is really nothing here to alarm anybody but Mr. Hume himself. His handwriting on the wall may provoke a smile, but nobody but Mr. Hume will shudder at what must at the worst remind our readers of the graceless under traduate who graduate who "casually observed in passing, Mene, Mene, Tekel and Upharsin." and Upharsin." We absolutely cannot accept Mr. Hums and his followers as playing the part here of the harbingers of the great Revolution in France. The men are as different as the times.

Nor can we believe for a moment in the immense Indian prole-tariat, or that "the moving power in India, as in France, will come from the sans culottes, the forty or fifty starving millions." British rule," he tells us, "conceived in the noblest and most beneficent spirit, is nevertheless mainly responsible for the creation beneficent spirit, is nevertheless mainly responsible for the creation of a gigantic half starved Proletariat, estimated, by those who have means of judging possessed by no Europeans, at not much less than fifty millions of people." Where are they? In concealment, and visible only to the eyes that have already gazed on the umbrella-shrouded features of Koot Hoomi. He, though, can always see them clearly, and to us they may be visible at the times of the Hindoo and Mahomedan festivals. "Who," he asks, "are the men who often, and of late with increasing frequency, vict in our streats burn raze or desecrate houses, temples, mosques. riot in our streets, burn, raze or desecrate houses, temples, mosques,. and even have, in one instance, gone the length of throwing themselves unarmed on the bayonets of European troops?" Let us pause to tell him. They are the same rowdy and perhaps fanatical people who have existed ever since there were Hindus and Mahomedans living cheek by jowl, a nuisance to each other no doubt, but no more powerful to-day than ever they were, and as prone now as any former period to invoke the protection of British. authority, the one class against the other. They have no thought of independence. They know nothing and care nothing for political agitation. They are still profoundly ignorant of the fac that our "beneficent" rule has rendered their lives more miserable than the lives of our forefathers, who were ground down and despoiled by scores of conflicting chieftains. They know nothing even of Mr. Hume. The only class Mr. Hume addresses, and the only class from which he has a hearing, live on a very different stratum. There may be possibilities of disturbance amongst them if Englishmen can be found to hound them on to act as they are beginning to write. The disturbance would be short-lived, and the lesson a hard one. But we see as little danger to the State in his imaginary proletariat as in his imaginary literary upheaval. His signs and wonders are visible to no eyes but his own, and are the outcome, we honestly believe, of a mind anxious beyond any fear of ridicule to gain a little temporary notoriety. Under no other circumstances can we imagine an Euglishman writing the rubbish that appears elsewhere over the signature of the author of "The Star in the East."

THE INDIAN PETROLEUM INDUSTRY.

(Pioneer.)

Some months ago, in an article on the oil-fields of Assam and Burma, we urged the necessity of Government giving more atten-tion to the collection and publication of information regarding the various petroleum sources in India, and we expressed the opinion that the Geological Survey was rot altogether blameless in the matter. In support of this last assertion we instanced the case of Cachar. In 1801 Captain Stewart informed the Superintendent of the Geological Survey that rock oil had been discovered in some of the Cachar hills. No steps were taken by the officers of the Survey, however, and all that Professor Ball could stall us in the superior Cachar hills. tell us in the volume on Economic Geology, published by order of the Government so late as 1881, was that beyond Captain Stewart's letter and a passing notice of the existence of the oil in the Imperial Gazetteer "no fuller accounts of Cachar petroleum the Imperial Gazetter "no fuller accounts of Cachar petroleum were available." Our whole contention is now practically admitted by the officials of the Survey, for we have just received a "Note on the Occurrence of Petroleum in India" by Mr. Medlicott, who is one of them.

Mr. Medlicott, however, thinks it necessary to take up the cudgels on behalf of his Department. "Years ago," he saye, the little that can be learned from surface examination regard ing the habitat of petroleum in India had been set forth, and until the fulness of time there would have been no use repeating until the fulness of time there would have been no use repeating it." If this be so, how comes it that in 1881 Professor Ball, the Government Geologist, could tell us nothing about Cachar oil, and that in the case of all the sources except those reported on by Mr. Lyman and Mr. Mallet (which we expressly excepted) he had to depend mostly on the assertions of travellers, Military Officers, and Civiliaus? That, moreover, the Geological Survey had not done all in its power to spread a knowledge of the distribution and nature of petroleum may be proved by Mr. Madhad not done all in its power to spread a knowledge of the distribution and nature of petroleum may be proved by Mr. Medlicott's own report. For example, we there learn that from an ignorance of the geological conditions under which petroleum is found, Mr. Lyman, in his report on the Punjab oil-lands, formulated an entirely erroneous rule regarding the limit of depth. Similarly, Mr. Medlicott hints that the failure of the Baronga Oil Company was due to a mistaken notion that all petroleum beds must be like those of Baku and Pennsylvania, and the conbeds must be like those of Baku and Pennsylvania, and the consequent employment of overcostly apparatus. Both these mistakes might have been avoided had the present Note been in existence some years ago. We do not say the Geological Survey should undertake the work of actual boring, but it would hardly seem that they bave hitherto done all they could to prepare the way. Had the Department not had peculiar notions as to the "fulness of time" for publishing in a connected way all they could discover regarding the petroleum resources of India, we might not now be importing two million gallons of oil annually from America.

Now that we have got a connected report from the Survey we gladly acknowledge its value and interest. It ought to do much to stimulate inquiry and enterprise in connection with what should become a most important Indian industry. Mr. Medlicott institutes an interesting and tolerably exhaustive comparison into the characteristics and peculiarities of the various oil-bearing regions of the world, and though we think the part dealing with India hardly bears witness to that perfect surface examination of all Indian fields which the Survey professes to have undertaken, it is sufficient to give a general idea of India's resources. In the article above mentioned we alluded to the concession of the Makum Oil Fields to the Assam Railways and Trading Company, and to the lack of energy displayed by that Company in working them. Mr. Medlicott fully bears us out in this. "There can scarcely be a doubt," he says, "that the oil resources of this region are very great, but apparently the cil is neglected." When he applied to the manager at Dibrugarh for a barrel of oil, he was informed that the Company covally got anough for their he was informed that the Company scarcely got enough for their There can be no reason for this except that the Com own use. pany either have not the necessary capital or prefer devoting it to the coal-fields, of which also they have a concession. The conditions of the lease may not permit of the Government insisting on the oil fields being worked; but if that be so, such a lease should certainly not be renewed. With regard to Burma we find our expectations fully shared by Mr. Medlicott. "It is unquestionable," he says, "that the oil resources of Burma admit of an inable," he says, "that the oil resources of Burma admit of an indefinite extension of enterprise," and he even goes so far as to predict, as a "safe prophecy," that "the oil-measures of Eastern India may be supplying half the world with light within a measurable time when the American oil-pools have run dry." Appended to Mr. Medlicott's Note on the occurrence of the oil throughout India generally is a report by Mr. R. A. Townsend, the Superintendent of Petroleum Operations in Belüchistan, on the oil-measures of the Khatan field in the Mari hills. Owing to the impractiable nature of the rocks in this district boring is attended with exceptional difficulties, but these have been overcome, and the results attained have been so encouraging that Mr. come, and the results attained have been so encouraging that Mr. Medlicott advises further experiment over a wider area. sent about a thousand barrels of crude Khatan oil are being sent to Sibi in order that its suitability for locomotive fuel may be thoroughly tested. Taken as a whole these reports are distinctly hopeful for the future of Indian petroleum.

THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

(Englishman.)

Rumour has been very busy with the intentions of the Finance Committee, but very little that is in the least definite or authentic as to their real proposals has been given to the world. We think this is to be regretted; not that we forget the inconvenience likely to be caused by premature publication of official news, but because, in our opinion, it would be advantageous to the Committee itself to invite public criticism on its preliminary proposals before finally formulating them. The proper disposal of the finances of Government, with due regard to economy and efficiency in the public service, is a subject in which the tax-paying public is, of course keenly interested, and on which it may, with justice, claim a right to be heard. In the present case, however, there appears to be some danger of the whole matter being settled in the secret places of officialdom, and of the public hearing nothing about it until a cut-and-dried Resolution is published in the Gazette announcing the final conclusions of Government. If it is now too late to hope that the Finance Committee will publish in some form a sketch of the suggestions it is proposed to make before they are finally adopted by the whole body, we may at least ask for a statement of the final proposals of the Government of Bengal before any decision is come to. Naturally, rumour—Fana malum quo non aliud velorius ullum—represents the Committee as a body of tructlent barbarians, whose motto is "Down with hevery think!" They are to stop all expenditure on education in Bengal—the Secretariats are to fall before them at one fell swoop—"cakes and ale" have long ago desappeared, and now the butter is to be escraped off the bread, and salaries are to be reduced all round. One consolation in the midst of these appalling announcements is that this same "fama" is "Tam ficti practique tenax, quam nuntiu veri," and salt in large quantities is a necessary condiment to enable us to digest her statements. We are still further consoled by a recent announcement, on the highest po the Collector of Customs will also become Superintendent of Stamps and Stationery. As regards changes in matters not relating to appointments, it is said that reductions are to be suggested in the "building grants" to schools, and further savings will be effected by transferring more colleges to local management. Travelling allowances are also said to be exercising the frugal minds of the members of the committee; "fixed travelling allowances" especially are anathena maranatha to them The inevitable "unexpected" is also said to have happened in the case of the Agricultural Department. It should, according to most "well-informed" people, have withered at the first blast of the appointment of a Finance Committee; but, like Balaam of old, Mr Elliott and his colleagues, being sent to curse, have turned round and "blessed altogether." The Department is said to have justified its existence, not so much on account of remarkable di-coveries in agriculture, from which it has been hopelessly precluded by want of funds, but because of the promise it gives of really efficient supervision over one of the most important matters of our administration, the settlement of Government and Wards' Estates. If this is so, the justification is complete; for of the necessity for such supervision there has been no reasonable doubt for many years past.

THE FINANCIAL SHEARS AND EDUCATION.

(Bombay Gazette.)

If the Rangoon appointment is to be a precedent for the ages to come, if the blind Fury with the abhorred shears of Financial Retrenchment is to snip the hairs of the heads of India, and the lovely chairs of the Principals and Professors (how beautiful are their feet!) are to be destined, as in the French Revolution, to the non-graduates, we may forthwith undermine the University Tower, and stop the clock and give the money back to Mr. Premchand Roycland, the enlightened minded donor, who donum dedit.—Musings of an M.A. in Honours.

Quorum pars magna fui.—Quintilian.

'Tis the place, and all about it—still the chirping sparrows call. And the burning Deccan sunshine beats upon the college wall. Many a night from yonder casement ere I wearied went to rest, Did I see the Mutha Mula winding slowly from the west.

Here about I pensive wandered, nourishing a youth sublime, With the fairy tales of science, and the long results of time. When I dipped into the future, far as human eye could see. Saw the College Sirkar fostered—flourish to eternity.

Oh! the Sirkar shallow-pated! Oh! my College lost to me! Oh! the dreary, dreary clippings of a false economy. Falser than a fancy franchise, falser than all sougs have sung, Puppet to a mean Committee—servile to a saving tongue.

Is it well to wish thee lasting, having flourished to decline
To a lower range of teaching, fit for narrower minds than mine?
Yet it shall be—thou shalt lower down thy level day by day, What was fine within thee growing coarse to sympathise with clay.

As the Head is, so the College—now thy Head is but a clown, And the grossness of his nature will have weight to drag thee down.

He will answer for the purpose, easy 'tis to understand Why they took the first non-Graduate, just the first that came to hand.

BENGAL.

MR. H. E. PERKINS and Mr. C. J. Daniell are permitted to resign the Bengal Civil Service, with effect from the 1st of November and the 1st of October respectively.

Mr. W. C. Macpherson, Under-Secretary in the Revenue Department of the Bengal Government, returns from furlough on the 27th inst. Mr. G. K. Lyon, the officiating incumbent, will probably continue to officiate as Under Secretary in the vacancy caused by the departure, on leave, of Mr. H. A. W. Phillips.

The winter harvest, which is now being gathered, has been excellent throughout Lower Bengal. At Howish, sixteen seers and-a-half of common rice are now obtainable for a rupee, against twelve seers at this time last year; in Shahabad and Kattak, nineteen seers against fourteen. These rates fairly represent the fall along the whole line. Wheat and barley are also cheaper everywhere. There has been a very marked fall in the price of the best sort of rice, which was six rupees a maund wholesale in Calcutta last year, and is now three rupees five annas. The coming year should be a good one for the export trade in grain, and the working classes will find life easier.

THE introduction of the system of trial by jury has not been followed in Bengal by very satisfactory results. The Lieutenant-Governor, in roviewing the Bengal Police Administration report for last year, found it necessary to remark that the "results in jury districts continue to be very bad." To reduce the evil results as far as possible, his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor reads Magistrates and Sessions Judges a lecture upon their duty, enjoining upon the former the necessity of thoroughly investigating all cases for themselves, and not sending forward half sifted cases to the Sessions Court, and upon the latter, the strict observance of the obligation imposed on them by the law to hand up all cases in which they see good and sufficient reason for differing from the verdict of the jury to the High Court.

MADRAS.

RESULTING presumably from the protest of the Chamber of Commerce, orders have been received from the Government of India suspending action in regard to the closing of the Gunpowder Factory at Madras, as recently ordered.

It is stated with reference to the gold mines in the Mysore district that cooly labour is not altogether so plentiful in that region as most people suppose. Labour can be had in abundance for surface works, but when it comes to a question of going underground Natives always shirk it.

The sea, which during the late storm so rapidly encroached towards Royapuram, Madras, and threatened the destruction of the Sailors' Home and other adjacent buildings, to some extent receded a few days after the storm, and the Harbour Works authorities took the precaution to skirt the beach with boulders and rubble procured from the Pallaveram quarries. The work has been going on vigorously since the bad weather, and the road rendered passable to wheeled traffic. It is feared, however, that before long there will be no beach road from Royapuram unless the railway authorities are prepared to give up a portion of the enclosed compound of the Royapuram Railway station.

BOMBAY.

A SACRILEGIOUS robbery is reported from Madhol (Gca). An entrance was obtained into the Catholic Chapel by cutting away the wooden bars of which the door was made, and taking off a crown and silver arrows from the image and the contents of a charity box.

At the invitation of the Bombay Presidency Association, Lord Resebery met some 50 or 60 Native gentlemen at the rooms of the Association. There was a sprinkling of Europeans also, among whom were the Hon. Forbes Adam, and Messrs. Wordsworth, Kittredge, Leith, and T. J. Bennett. Mr. Dinshaw Maneckjee Petit, the president, was also present. Several interesting Indian questions were discussed, especially those referring to representation by election in Legislative Councils and to increased employment of Natives in the higher offices in the administration. The meeting lasted for over an hour and ahalf. Lord Rosebery was afterwards shown over the rooms of the Ripon Club.

The Bombay Town Council passed, at their usual sitting on Wednesday, a resolution evincing their cordial appreciation of the valuable services rendered by the late Mr. A. W. Forde, who had for years acted as Consulting Engineer to the Municipality, and of the great loss sustained by the Municipality in his death. The motion was proposed by Captain Morland, seconded by Mr. Ragunath N. Khote, and supported by the chairman, M. Dosabhoy Framjee, who bore testimony to the valuable assistance rendered by Mr. Forde to successive Municipal Commissioners. The Council resolved to abolish the office of Consulting Engineer, and, accordingly, the item of expenditure on account of the salary of such an officer was struck off from the new budget, on the motion of Mr. Khote, seconded by Mr. Javerilal Umiashankar. The chairman, in expressing his approval of the abolition of the office, observed that they had now a very able engineer in Mr. Clarke, who is entrusted with the carrying out of the Tansa Works, and that in Mr. Walton, too, they had a competent engineer thoroughly conversant with the drainage question, and possessing the ripe experience acquired by twenty years' service under the Municipality. If however, any occasion arose when it might be found necessary to have the professional opinion of an engineer in any special case, they might obtain it from some qualified officer of Government, and any expense incurred by way of consultation fee might be provided for from the surplus cash balance.

It will be remembered that the Town Council had lately before it for discussion a letter by Dr. T. Cooke, Principal of the Poona College of Science, on the subject of technical education, when it was considered that the letter did not afford sufficient date for their guidance, and consequently it was resolved to wait for further particulars before making any grant for the purpose. Another letter from Dr. Cooke, giving the details of the scheme, was accordingly submitted to the Town Council, at their meeting yesterday, when it was agreed that the document served to throw the additional light required by that body before they sanctioned any grant. Dr. Cooke in his letter pointed out that the skilled artisans who would be turned out by the technical school would be a benefit to the country and the Municipality alike. The Council were unanimous in holding that the Municipality must bear their share, with the Government and other public bodies, of the expenses of the proposed technical school, but opinions differed as to the amount that should be paid by them. Mr. Banajee moved that Rs. 3,000 should be paid by the Municipality for that purpose; but Mr. Javerilal Umiashankar thought that Rs. 5,000 would be a more adequate, grant for carrying out a scheme of such importance, and formulated an amendment to this effect. But Colonel Merewether moved another, fixing the amount of municipal contribution at Rs. 4,000. The chairman earnestly exhorted the meeting to vote the largest sum they could for a scheme which was calculated to do immense good to the country. The Council being equally divided on Colonel Merewether's amendment, it was thrown out by the casting vote of the chairman; and Mr. Javerilal's propositon was then carried.

MR. YESHWUNT M. KELKAR has been appointed Oriental Translator to Government, and will assume charge of his office some time in January next, on being relieved of the duties of secretary to the Forest Commission. Mr. Nowrojee Dorajee Khandallawalla, acting Oriental Translator, proceds to Ahmedabad to act as Judge of the Small Causes Court in that city in place of Mr. C. M. Cursedjee, who acts as Fourth Judge of the Bombay Small Causes Court.

Bombay Small Causes Court.

The death is announced of Mr. H. Frank Shanahan, M.A., Professor of History and Moral Philosophy at the Ahmedabad College, which took place on Sunday evening from cholera. The deceased gentleman was one of the msto distinguished students of the local St. Xavier's College, and had throughout his career endeared himself by his amiable disposition to all those who came in contact with him. He was only the other day selected by the Syndicate of the Bombay University as one of the examiners in English in the Matriculation Examination; and was last year one of the examiners in Latin. The news of his death will be received with unfeigned regret by the large circle of friends who knew him in Bombay and elsewhere.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

THE Government of the North-West Provinces seems inclined to look more favourably than hitherto upon the proposed railway from Hardwar to Dehra and Rajpur. The promoters have been officially informed that Mr. E. S. Hunt, Executive Engineer, has been deputed to go over the proposed line and to send in a report upon it. After the receipt of this report, Major Gracey, the Assistant Secretary in the Public Works Department, will proceed to Masuri to have a conference with the promoters.

YET another examination scandal! The examinations for ent:ance into Roorkee College commenced on Monday at various centres. When the papers for use at Lahore were examined it was found that the envelopes containing them, atthough registered and securely sealed, had been cut open at the ends, and either resealed or gummed. This, of course, prevented the holding of the examination at Lahore, and ought to vitiate the examinations at the two centres; since it seems almost certain that the envelopes must have been tampered with at Roorkee before reaching the Post Office, for the benefit of candidates there.

THE Judges of the Punjab Chief Court having made an unsuccessful attempt to clear off the arrears of litigation by working over-hours, have now demanded the appointment of a Fifth Judge. It is said that the work of the Court is so much in arrears that an appellant has to wait nearly two years before he can obtain a hearing. The appointment of a Fifth Judge would enable two Benches to sit daily, leaving the off Judge to dispose of Chamber and miscellaneous cases. By this means there is every reason to hope that the present dead-lock would soon vanish and litigants would have a reasonable expectation of seeing their cases decided in their own lifetime. Anticipating the appointment of a Fifth Judge, the local Bar has drawn a memorial praying that one of their number should be appointed.

PIECE-GOODS form the chief article of export from the Punjab. Now, in 1875-76 some 12,000 maunds of European piece-goods were exported, valued at about 33 lakhs, while in 1885-86 there were about 38,000 maunds exported, but the value was only some 37 lakhs. In other words, while the volume of trade in this article tripled itself, the value increased only by one-eighth. This fall in value the Financial Commissioner attributes in part to the assignment of excessive tariff values in some cases in 1875-76, but he thinks there has also been a real fall in price, due partly to the abolition of customs duties on imports into India, and partly also to cheapened means of communication. Somewhat different has been the case of Indian cotton goods. In 1875-76 the total export was about 36,000 maunds, and last year it had risen to 47,000 maunds; but, on the other hand, the value had advanced from 12½ lakhs to about 21½ lakhs.

The external land trade of the Panjab in the year 1885-6 was, on the whole, larger than in either of the two preceding years, for although there was a slight decrease in importance, there was a most satisfactory increase in exports. Kashmir still heads the list as regards the value of imports, and Cabul takes the largest quantity of exports. The decrease in the import trade from Kashmir is chiefly under the head of shaws, which since the death of the late Maharajah, has fallen in value from Rs. 12,12,705 to Rs. 5,38,796. The export trade with Cabul has increased in value from Rs. 46,48,630 to Rs. 50,63,900, the increase being chiefly under the heads of piece-goods, tea, indigo, and Kohat salt. In the imports from Cabul there was a considerable decrease in the quantity of fruit owing to the crop having been seriously damaged by hailstorms, a considerable quantity of raw silk is imported from Cabul, and this article, as well as wool and pushm from Yarkand and Ladakh, also increased in quality. The Assistant Commissioner of Kulu expresses strong hopes of an increase in the Indian tea trade with Ladakh, but at present that market is chiefly monopolised by China traders.

GREAT festivities took place at Jummoo on the occasion of the Duke of Connaught's visit. The Duke and Duchess were entertained with a review of his Highness the Maharajah's force. Then his Highness the Maharajah paid them a visit, which was subsequently returned. At the palace at Mandi, salutes of thirty-one guns were fired on the arrival and departure of the Royal visitors; in the afternoon gymnastic performances and buffalo fighting were exhibited before the Duke, and in the evening his Royal Highness again visited his Highness the Maharajah at his palace, when some Mahratta actors and dancers performed; and after supper in the Maharajah's palace, fireworks and other illuminations were provided.

The Lieutenant-Tovernor of the Punjab and party arrived in Lahore at 1 40 p.m. on the 26th ult. Sir Charles Aitchison has no fever now; nor, indeed, was his indisposition so serious, as the abandonment of the tour made it appear. The sole reason of his return to Government House is that his medical adviser considers living in a house less likely to expose him to another chill than marching about in tents. When the camp arrives, his Honour will decide whether to start afresh from Lahore; or in prospect of an early meeting of the Public Services Commission, abandon the tour finally.

Miscellaneous.

BLIND AND INFLATED ENGLISHMEN.—The following entertaining effusion appears over the signature of "Hotspur" in the Tribune:—"Lord Lytton's facsimile, I mean Sir Lepel Griffin, has again spoken of the notorious impossibility of appointing Natives of India to the higher ranks of the Covenanted Civil Service. He also refers to the unwillingness of European officers of education or position to serve under Native superiors. Before the advent of the English in India, a large number of Europeans used to serve the Native States, and even now there are not a few in the service of the Native States, and this fact alone is sufficient for contradicting Sir Lepel. Sir Lepel brags of the 'ruling qualities' of the English, and refers to the ease with which a few thousands rule the millions of India as a proof of it; but in this he is most on account of any of their ruling qualities, but because their past conduct has been kind and just. The loyal Indians hear with great dismay the taunts and brags of the Anglo-Indians of Sir Lepel's type. England has not got worse foes than such hotheaded officers. The people are gradually suspecting the English Government of trifling with the best interests of the country, and trampling under foot the most cherished aspirations of its people. Men like Sir Lepel Griffin give colour to such suspicions, and wee be to the day when this suspicion becomes a conviction. The existence of the British Government in India is due entirely to the sufferance of the people, without which it would be nowhere even with four times the number of its present soldiers. 'Pride goes before destruction,' and the manner in which Sir Lepel speaks of the birthright of his nation to rule and ours to serve is rather ominous. Cursed be the treacherous sons of India who have, by their sycophancy and flattery, allowed the blind inflated Englishmen of Sir Lepel's stamp to form such opinions."

The Panama Canal.—A Router's telegram, dated Paris, Dec. 18, says:—At a meeting, yesterday, of the Geographical Society, M. de Lesseps again declared that the Panama Canal would be open for traffic in 1889. He added:—"There will not be sufficient time for the construction of locks. We shall make them later on; the essential point is that by the date mentioned shipping shall be able to pass through the canal."

A VERY characteristic illustration of the spirit in which the Bengal Native Fress set about their business is furnished in an article which the Indian Mirror devotes to the purpose of teaching a Native prince how he should distribute his charities. A few days ago we had the pleasant task of chronicling the fact that the Maharajah of Jeypore had given a lakh of rupees to the fund for providing medical relief to the women of India. The gift appeared to us to be one which the Maharajah's countrymen would most gratefully appreciate; at all events it can have occured to no one as a likely thing that it could give offence to any one, and no one, so far as we know, thought it necessary to apologise for it. But it seems that in the presence of uncharity charity itself needs vindicating. The Mirror is surprised at the Maharajah's gift, and very much offended. The gift is an improper one, because it was given, not through any appreciation of the purpose to which it is to be devoted, but in the belief that it would please the Viceroy, and that it would probably facilitate the accomplishment of some of the Maharajah's own personal objects. Now, this is characteristic, because it exactly accords with the inveterate habit of a particular journalistic school of setting down everything in suspicion and malice, placing the assumption on the unfavourable side, and letting judgment go against everyone by default. The Government issue a commission of inquiry into certain loudly-proclaimed grievance, and they are told that they are not sincere, but are playing a trick with the public. A liberal-minded man gives a donation to a public purpose, and he is told that he has some personal object in view. Let the Government prove their honesty, and we will believe that they are honest; let the Maharajah prove his charity, and we will believe he makes charitable gifts for charity sake. Such is the line of contention, and any fair-minded person, will see how discreditable it is, how it prevents the Press which follows it from exerting the influence it might exert if it followed the ways of fairness, truth and reason. We can account for it in this particular instance and the explanation is singular. While the Maharajah can give a lakh for the nursing of his sick countrywomen, he will not give five hundred rupees for maintaining a handful of political carpet-baggers in Bengal. He will not, in short, subscribt to what is called the National Fund. Is any further explanation necessary than that which the Mirror so innocently gives?—

Bombay Gazette.

THE WIDENING OF THE SUEZ CANAL.—The commission representing the Suez Canal Company to-day concluded the arrangements with the Egyptian Government for widening the canal. By this scheme, to which the signatures of the parties will probably be affixed on Monday next, the width of the canal from Port Said to the Bitter Lakes is to be 44 metres, and thence to Suez 65 metres.

Lord Dufferin.—The Rafig-i-Hind of Lahore, in a leading article entitled "Lord Dufferin," takes the Bengali papers to task for reckless writing. After giving the substance of an article in a Bengali paper published at Lahore, the writer says:—"It is a great pity that while the pitiable condition of the King of Burma, the bloodshed consequent on military operations, and the loss of national independence of the Burmese is dwelt upon, no mention is made of the circumstances which led to the Burmese war. Nor is any notice taken of the folly of the Burmese King who rendered war inevitable. Preaching like mullas is of no consequence in political matters, and is proof of ignorance of those who indulge in such preaching. It is essentially necessary in such matters to pay particular attention to the exigencies of the time. Although peace and tranquillity are not likely to be restored in Burma for some time to come, yet there can be no doubt that the people of Burma will, in the end, find reason to be thankful to Providence for having rescued them from the grasp of a tyrant, and placed them under a civilised Government. Our contemporaries must be either ignorant of the cruelties of which Thebaw was guilty, or they purposely shut their eyes to the doings of the Burmese King. Lord Dufferin is also taken to task for the imposition of the income-tax; but in our opinion we have never had a Viceroy who has done more to remove race distinctions, by imposing the same tax on Natives and Europeans, including himself. Such instances of self-sacrifice are very rare in the history of India. It is true that Lord Dufferin has not yet attended to the national wants of the people; but in this respect he is very little to blame. In the first the people have themselves to blame, inasmuch as they generally ask for things for which they are not yet qualified; while to some of their requests the Government cannot immediately concede, as it would be impolitic to do so. It is, therefore, anything but fair to expect Lord Dufferin to act against

DEATH OF AN AUSTRIAN FIELD-MARSHAL.—Our Vienna correspondent telegraphs that Field-Marshal Baron von Mondel, Aide-de-Camp General to the Emperor Francis Joseph, died on Saturday, aged 66.

THE STRANDING OF THE CUNARD STEAMER PAVONIA.—Judgment was given on Saturday in the Board of Trade inquiry at Liverpool, into the stranding of the Cunard steamer Pavonia, on the morning of the 29th ult., off Gurnet Point, at the entrance to Boston Harbour. The Court found that the compasses were correct, but they were of opinion that the master of the vessel had committed errors in judgment with regard to the position of the vessel, though from his long experience of the navigation of this part of the coast he had some grounds for what might be regarded as over confidence in his position. The Court therefore did not pronounce him in default.

The headquarters of Bo-Shway, the Burmess rebel leader, have been successfully stormed by Brigadier-General Low, the camp being captured by the British. The rebel leader and his followers, however, retreating into the jungle.

MEMOIR OF CAPTAIN DALTON, H.E.I.C.S.*

John Dalton, the subject of this interesting memoir, and deservedly called, by no less capable a judge than Sir John Malcolm, "a gallant and able officer," had a most varied career. Sprung from a family of soldiers, he was, in 1741, at the early, but in those days not unusual, age of fifteen, appointed to a regiment of Marines. This corps was, as was, by the way, the case with all our Indian Regiments in olden days, known by the name of the officer by whom it was raised, and who commanded it; in this instance one Colonel Hanmer. Dalton's regiment had but recently reached the East when the news arrived that peace had been concluded between England and France: and that, in consequence, concluded between England and France: and that, in consequence, it, like many other corps, was to be reduced, the officers being placed on half-pay. To young Dalton, who, at the age of twentythree, was thrown on the world with a pittance of two shillings and fourpence a day, this meant, not only the termination of an honourable career, but absolute ruin. Many men thus circumstanced would have "gone to the dogs." But, fortunately for him, Dalton found a friend in the gallant Boscawen, the hero of so many nautical songs, who, to his position of Admiral of the Blue, added, as was then usual, the military rank of General of Marines. The admiral at once appointed the young man to a 1st lieutenancy in one of the "Independent Companies in the East Indies;" and, this employ being precarious, procured for him, soon afterwards, a captain's commission in the service of the East India Company, who were then increasing the service of the East India Company, who were then increasing their miniature army at Fort St. David.

at Fort St. David.

Here it was that Dalton first met the great Clive, and established a friendship with him which seems to have ended only with life. He appears first to have smelt hostile powder in 1749, when, under Major Lawrence, he was sent to capture, on behalf of Sahajee, the deposed ruler of Tanjore, the fortress of Devicotta, a feat which was duly performed, and in the report of which Dalton's name honourably figures along with that of Clive.

Two years later Dalton distinguished himself in command of an advanced post of the English army (who were in full retreat after an unaccountable panic which seized them during their siege of Volconda) by repulsing, in circumstances of exceptional difficulty, a determined assault made in great force by the French difficulty, a determined assault made in great force by the French troops in pay of Chunda Sahib.

But the real "illustration" of Dalton's life was the defence of the important fortress of Trichinopoly, the key of the Kaveri and Koleroon valleys; and to this most remarkable feature in the gallant soldier's history deserved prominence is accorded. gallant solders history deserved prominence is accorded. The details have already been before the reading world; "are they not written in the book of" Orme? Orme had the advantage of perusing Dalton's journal, and wisely utilized it; nor do we think that he is justly liable to the strictures for so doing, which the author of this work pronounces. That he did not, in so many words, acknowledge this source of his information, may, in these days, seem ungracious; but it must be remembered, that, among the older English historians Orme is by no means singular in not older English historians, Orme is by no means singular in not always citing his authorities; indeed, in this matter of invariably referring to them, Gibbon may be almost said to stand alone.

Dalton's own narrative of the long siege, and of the gallant and gallant and persistent defence, indicates many points of resemblance to the better known defence of Arcot, and is well worthy of perusal. If Captain John Dalton has not had a vates area, such as Clive had in Massallar it is not because he did not describe. such as Clive had in Macaulay, it is not because he did not deserve one; and Mr. Dalton, in his pleasantly written work, has done his best to supply the deficiency.

THE HISTORY OF THE FORTY VIZIERS.†

It is related that a great king in the East was blessed—or curred—with a designing and intrigging wife, who wished to remove from her path the royal son by another mother. So raking up an unfounded charge against the young lad she moved her august spouse to such a pitch of wrath and fury that he ordered his son to be led forth and slain. Whereupon one of the Vezirs stepped forward, and, telling a tale of a nature to cause the king to reflect and refrain, he saved the youth's life. But later in the day the wife, also narrating a story suitable to her own ends, over-persuaded the monarch once again to order the offender's death. Day after day the same course of events happened—in the morning the Vizier's influence was in the ascendant, while at night the fickle ruler of men was led astray from the path of justice by the clever and men was led astray from the path of justice by the clever and unscrupulous wife of his bosom, till in the end the woman's guilt was proved, and she reaped the reward of her ill-deeds. Such is an outine of the "History of the Forty Vezirs."

As might have been expected, the Ministers, for the most part, in their endeavour to save the king's son, dwelt strongly upon the faithlessness of woman, helaying upon the deceit and guile of their debased nature. Whereas the wife brought prominently forward the designs and plots of scheming youths and treacherous counsellors.

Forty against one is scarcely a fair trial of skill, but on the whole the lady's stories were little, if any, inferior to the tales of her numerous rivals.

Two specimens will suffice the reader to form some sort of notion of the style of the work which Mr. Gibb, with rare felicity of diction, has rendered into plain, readable, and withal, Oriental language.

"The lust of man is as one, and that of woman as nine." So proclaim the Eastern sages, and why? This is the explanation. The Angel Gabriel one day came to Adam, and bringing him ten apples of lust bade him beware and not allow Eve to have any. Instead, however, of eating them all, as he was commanded, he partook of one, and a wondrous light appearing in Paradise away he went to see what had happened. Scarcely had his back been turned when Eve, being left alone, Satan came, and tempting her she ate all the nine apples; thus, compared with her husband, the ratio of her guilt was as nine to one.

Satan, so proclaims the Turkish writer, had a son as evil-minded and wicked as his father. The better to tempt Adam and Eve the unhallowed offspring of darkness became a kid, where-upon the father of markind at once slew the animal—but to no effect—the soul-inspiring voice of the King of Evil at once re-called his son to lite. Again did Adam slay the creature and throw it in pieces to the winds of Heaven; it was only to see it once more return to its original condition. So the third time the pair not only killed the kild but atte the flesh thereof; wherethe pair not only killed the kid but ate the flesh thereof; whereupon, when the Arch Fiend called his son, the latter responded to double from within the two parents of the world. "My son," rejoined Satan, "thou hast found thy best place. Let us tempt the sons of Adam, thou from within and I from without till the Resurrection, and urgo them to many sins, and make them deserving of Hell."

There is of course, in so large, a number of tales a certain amount of sameness and monotony; but there will be found no inconsiderable degree of worldly wisdom, and the quaintness of language and peculiarity of style lends a charm which should attract the reflective reader.

WORLDLY TALES.*

"Worldly Tales" having appeared in the columns of a society paper, it may be taken for granted that they are more or less tinged with sensationalism—a circumstance which to most readers tinged with sensationalism—a circumstance which to most readers will lend them an additional charm. But there are some keen touches of fun and frolic, as well as glimpses of the inner life of the soul. What can be more dull, for instance, than that a gallant son of Mars should mention to the mother that he was smitten, she taking the compliment to herself, whereas he intended it for her daughter? The denouement, too, is equally ludicrous; the distracted lover found relief in the fraternal affection of a light that the respect which is not the standard of the second with the respect which is brother, who, in order to enable the accepted suitor to transfer his affections to the daughter, proposed himself to the girl's "mamma," and, of course, was accepted, the affection being still kept in the family. Again, what a touch of nature is displayed in the portrait of an old widower, who discarded his daughter because she married against his wishes, and refused to relent till the destruction by fire of the favourite coffee-house, where he had been wont to dine, revealed to him the loneliness and melancholy of the desolate life he was leading!

The tales, twelve in number, are brilliant and exciting; and in the interval, between plum cake, roast beef and mince-pies, a few minutes might be pleasantly spent in company with Mr. Sherer's

IN THE TRADES, THE TROPICS, AND THE ROARING FORTIES.+

There can be but little doubt that Messrs. Longman and Co. have done wisely in publishing a more moderate-priced edi ion of Lady Brassey's charming volume, giving an account of her travels "in the Trades, the Tropics, and the Roaring Forties." True, everyone has heard of the splendid yacht known to tame as the Sunbeam, but we venture to think that there are not a few who have been deterred by the res augusta dorin from spending a guinea in the purchase of a book which, to be read by thousands, must be within the reach of thousands. This has now been remedied, and it may be confidently assumed that many a Christmas fireside will derive pleasure and profit from this cheuper edition of the most charming of vorces. edition of the most charming of voyages.

But what a strange thing is life. It can hardly be realised that

whose home is the briny ocean, suffers dreadfully from scasickness, which the experience of many—nay, almost boundless—voyages has never succeeded in overcoming; and so we find her an a gale in the Atlantic to ill to enjoy the exquisite pleasure of going to the bottom of the sea in the midst of a hurricane of wind, and an ocean of foam. Verily, yachting is not all pure, undiluted pleasure. Still, when they reach port, and scene after scene of loveliness is portrayed to the delighted reader, when nature, in all its tropical beauty of sun, shadow, and foliage—the air, the earth, and the water all trying to outstrip one another in exquisite radiance and charm—is presented to the imagination, then, perchance, the tenth commandant is endangered, and feelings of envy stealing gradually to the front—poor fallen humanity in a weak moment is tempted to think that, after all, a fine yacht, and an income of forty or fifty thousand a year to keep it up, is not a very unpleasant mode of passing existence.

Amidst such scenes of loveliness and beauty even a less practical pen than that of Lady Brassey could scarcely fail to inspire feelings of pleasure. Few will read the work without a sigh of regret that the spots are forbidden to the ordinary traveller, who is blessed with neither a long purse nor an over amount of spare time; but, if one cannot in person visit the tropics, it is at least some compensation that the fair writer can give so graphic and faithful a picture of the scenes—a picture considerably enhanced by the numerous graphic and really exquisite illustrations which abounds at well-nigh every page of a work possessing but few rivals amongst the many competiors for public support which this festive season invariably brings forth.

A READY REMEDY FOR INDIA'S EXCHANGE DIFFICULTIES.*

Major Sedgwick's remedy for India's exchange difficulties may be put before the reader in a few words. A merchant can, and does, he tells us, obtain a sovereign, equal at par, to ten rupees, welling in Europe, for gold, ten rupees' worth of Indian wheat. His sovereign, in India, is worth, not ten, but twelve rupees. An "Indian cultivator who wants to buy gold will act very unwisely if, in the first instance, he sells his produce for rupees while there is any possible way of selling for gold." Now, the Government of India, receiving the bulk of the Revenue, that derived from land, in rupees, pays its debts in gold; thus it has "to purchase gold with depreciated rupees." Yet the Government of India has it in its power, almost by a stroke of the pen, to place itself in the position of the grain merchant, by simply taking (in a manner already provided for by law in the chief wheat-producing Province, the Punjab) its revenue in kind, instead of in cash, and exporting it in suitable vessels of its own. And that England and Europe offer a favourable market for "unlimited quantities at prices which shall prove remunerative to all concerned" we are assured on the highest authority. Major Sedgwick thinks, on the strength of caiculations which he gives at length, that the Government of India "could afford to sell its Punjab wheat for gold at twenty-five shillings a quarter in order to secure the English market," and that it would not be necessary to send more than about three millions of tons of Indian wheat to England yearly (the present annual trade† amounts to fully a fourth of this quantity) in order (p. 15) "to realise fifteen millions of pounds sterling after cost of carriage had been defrayed."

Opinions will differ as to the commercial practicability, and the Opinions will differ as to the commercial practicability, and the advisability, of a plan which would revolutionise the entire cereal trade of this country, and which would seriously affect home agricultural interests. But, as a novel contribution to the literature of a most difficult matter, Major Sedgwick's pamphlet may well receive attentive, and even respectful, consideration.

"The Mystery of the Shroud" (Bristol: J. W. Arrowsmith and Co.; London: Simpkin, Marshall and Co.) is a brief story, written with a purpose, by Colonel J. Drew-Gay, whose other story of "How John Bull Lost London; or, the Capture of the Channel Tunnell," created such sensation when it appeared. The present tale, whose moral is to jealously guard from encroachment the open spaces round and about London, is likely to be as widely popular, judging from the circulation which it has already gained. It is written with the author's usual and well-known lightness and brilliancy of touch. The incidents—such as the spiriting away of the Home Secretary in a London fog—if somewhat sensational, are not outrageously improbable, and the workings of the supposed secret society are skilfully delineated. The tale is a revelation of Socialism in one of the aspects which it is possible it may assume if fogs and factories increase about the metropolis, and the conservation of open spaces is not insisted upon. The "Mystery of the Shroud" is cleverly and dramatically told, and will interest as well as instruct.

"The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine" (W. H. Allen and Co.) for December contains a number of interesting papers amply elucidated by drawings and diagrams. One of the most promising contributions is that by Mr. R. O'Byrne, who commences a series of historical sketches of those line-of-battle ships which still hold famous names in our Navy. Colonel Edward Mitchell, R.E., gives a very able and practical essay on "Photography as applied to Military Purposes." Brigade Surgeon Currau tells his experiences of "The Inner Life and Economy of a Troopship;" but surely he casts an unmerited slur upon his own profession when, in reference to officers who have been invalided, he writes that he "regards with suspicion military medical certificates, whether the same are given at home or abroad." Sir Owen Tudor Burne, whose "Military Biography" is penned by Lieutenant-Colonel A. L'Estrange, is better looking than the portrait given of him, and also has not to depend on the fact related that he is descended from Charlmagne, Alfred the Great and Edward the Third for the esteem in which he is held by all who know him. On the staff of Sir Hugh Rose and as private secretary to Lord Mayo he won popularity from all parties in India, and his biographer states only the simple truth in saying that no man had more friends in that country than "Owen Tudor." The article on "The Canadian Pacific Railway and is Strategic Value to England" is replete with information, and that on "High Explosives in Warfare" gives some very startling facts. But the Editor's own contribution on "British Rifle Power" is perhaps the most highly-charged explosive of all. It is certainly a "blow-up" for the War Office, for Major Edilott gives dates and data for the charges which brings against the Department; and he writes from personal knowledge, having been "behind the scenes." The story he tells of official "circumlocution" is a curious one, and can hardly fail to attract the notice of the Ordnanco Inquiry Commission now sitting, to which Commission Maj

UPPER BURMA.—The following summary will give a clear view of the state of affairs in Upper Burma according to the latest accounts by overland mail:—Bhamo is quiet in the north and south, along the river bank, and on the border of the Shan State of Mahalaing. About eighty Chinese and Shan marauders and a number of Bhamo malcontents attacked a part of the Bhamo stockade on the night of the 14th, killing two Europeans and two Natives, and wounding two Natives of the garrison battery. They fired the guard-house and barrack, but were beaten off, losing two killed and four wounded—the latter left behind. Katha and Shwebo both report that Prince Teik Ten Hmat, who was in arms against us eight months ago, has died, but this fact is not yet certain. The state of Katha and Shwebo remains unchanged. Mr. Rey, who was wounded some days ago, is now out of danger. The Ruby Mines advance party has been attacked by 2000 dacoits, and two Goorkhas were wounded. Mandalay city is quiet. At Sagain one important leader has submitted, and is now working on our side. After the troops cleared Myinmyoo, the cavalry, guided by Burmese scouts, caught the dacoits in the jungle and killed eight, besides wounding others, and recovered dacoited property which was restored to the villagers. The condition of Ava is unchanged. At Kyoukse a gang from the hills to the south-east has come down to the plains, and harried the villages near; a column from Woodwin has been ordered against them. Nothing fresh has occurred in the Pagan district, except that some loyal thoogyees in the interior have been killed. At Menbo the river bank is being cleared of dacoits. Three launches with a naval contingent patrol the river in a country boat, were attacked by a gang of unsuspecting river dacoits, and killed and wounded a number of them. At Yemethen nothing fresh has taken place. Muktela, to the north, has been troubled by the gang mentioned under the head of Kyoukse. The reinforcements for Myingyan have all arrived, and regular energetic action against the rebe

NATIVE AGITATION IN INDIA.

According to a telegram just received by the Times, a monster meeting of Natives, which the vernacular Press calls a "National Congress," is to assemble in Calcutta on the 27th inst., and, it is said, will be attended by a number of delegates from all parts of the country. Tho subjects to be discussed are of the same nature as those with which the utterances of Native agitators during the past three years have familiarised the public. That is to say, young Bengal will attract to its oratory a vast crowd which will make holiday and consider the affair in the light of a tamasha without, however, the enjoyment of the fireworks and sweetmeats which usually accompany all festive occasions in the East. So far, then, as to any danger being likely to occur to British authority or any weakening of British prestige by such a demonstration, there is not much to be afraid of; but the question remains whether it is wise upon the part of the local authorities to permit these gatherings together of poor and ignorant masses, in order that a few ill-disposed and self-seeking agitators should gain notoriety by talking evil against their rulers. The talk will be reported and amplified by the Native Press, which is on the side of sedition without understanding very clearly what it is writing about, and the mischief which Lord Dufferin complained of lately will again be encouraged and spread. We allow that it is difficult to deal with the matter, for the Government. must not appear to show any want of faith in its own purpose and strength. An Anglo-Indian contemporary would have restrictive measures enforced against the Native editors, because deliberate attempts to discredit the Government in the eyes of its subjects are not to beextenuated by the plea that those who make them are trying their 'prentice hand at journalism. "We do not leave dynamite in the hands of children and then let them go unchecked from disaster to disaster because they are too young to have mastered the science of explosives." This is all very well, but unfortunately we ourselves placed the dynamite (if such it be) in the youthful journalistic hands. Mr. J. M. Maclean, in an admirable paper contributed by him a couple of days ago to a contemporary, clearly exposes our early folly :-

The changed feeling of the Native population towards their rulers springs from various causes. Prominent among these is the revolutionary and godless system of education which we have introduced into the country, and by means of which we are training at the public expense swarms of agitators, who scoff at every form of discipline and have no reverence for any institutions, human or divine. With a sublime disregard of possible consequences, England has entrusted the teaching of the youth of India to professors, some of whom are agnostics in religion and political philosophers holding the most advanced ideas regarding the rights of man.

A more daringly grotesque experiment was never tried by a people anxious to keep in subjection an empire, the very existence of which is inconsistent with Western theories of self-government; and it is hardly surprising that one result of such teaching has been the creation in India of a school of Home Rulers who are chiefly distinguished by their skill in talking Gladstonese with a volubility surpassing even that of the great master of sophistical rhetoric himself.

This is simply and absolutely true, but, unfortunately, the evil has been wrought, and it is a question of policy whether it should be treated with a severe or simple remedy now. The undue exercise of the power which the Government possesses might be mistaken for fear, and might give further encouragement to discontent. We are inclined, as we have written before, to believe more in the healing influences of time. The good men do lives after them as well as the evil, and the benefits which England is bestowing upon India must sooner or later yield ample and precious fruit, although the ripening thereof seems long delayed. But whilst the Hindus of Bengal are repaying with ingratitude and reproach the debt which they owe to English rule it is pleasant to learn that the

Mahomedans, whom we have so much neglected in the distribution of places and preferments, have declined to make common cause with the seditious.

Digitized by Google

According to the telegram referred to, the Central Mahomedan Association has refused to take any part in the demonstration of the "National Congress," and its reasons for doing so are given through its secretary. The members of the Association, he says, have the welfare of the Indian people as much at heart as any other public body, and fully appreciates the necessity on the part of Government to widen and liberalise the administration; but "they think that the circumstances of the country are such as to suggest to all interested in its welfare a policy of confidence in the Government. They have every hope that a full measure of liberal treatment will be accorded, and they note that the Government has already taken steps to promote economical administration, and to consider the question of a larger employment of Natives. Nor can they ignore the fact that a Parliamentary inquiry has been promised. They think, therefore, that no good can result from an attempt to force the hands of the Government." It may be urged that the antagonism between Mahomedan and Hindu has had more to do with the penning of these sentiments than any loyalty to British rule, but we do not think so. Even if it can be so interpreted it is well to have the Mahomedans with us. But we are rather inclined to think that this shrewd race recognises the strength of England in its honesty of purpose, and sees hope for its own future under the shadow of that Power.

The Maharajah of Vizianagram's banquet at the Banqueting Hall to the Governor was a great success. One hundred and Hall to the Governor was a great success. One hundred and fifty ladies and gentlemen accepted invitations to meet his Excellency. The Maharajah proposed the Governor's health in a long speech, to which his Excellency replied at length. He took occasion to say:—"Although I have had to serve under many chiefs, I have found no sort of difficulty in accommodating myself to their way of looking at things. I have received most generous and most kindly support from Lords Hartington, Randolph Churchill, Kimberley and Cross. The Governor proceeded to state that a Railway from Singarent to Bezwada is about to be begun, and that he thinks it highly probable that long before five years are over Singareni coal will probable that long before five years are over Singareni coal will be coming down the Buckingham Canal into Madras. Mr. Bourke will begin his reign under most agreeable auspices. The season promises to be an admirable one; the provincial treasury is very full; and the condition of Southern India during the last two or three years has been better than at any period during its long annals.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to give us notice of the death, at Peshawur, of Sergeant James Allen, who served for twenty-one years in the 3rd Regiment "The Buffs." He joined that Regiment in 1854 at Malta, served in Greece, and landed in the Crimea in April, 1855. He was wounded in the trenches, and on recovery volunteered as one of a party to cover the storming of the Redan. He carried Captain Dunbar out of the Redan under a heavy fire when that officer was severely wounded, and also carried out Sergeant Hart, who receive a special pension on account of his dangerous wounds. Sergeant Allen also served with his regiment in China, and was present at the actions of Sinho, Tangkoo, and the storming and capture of the Taku Forts. For his long and distinguished services he received the Crimean medal, with clasp for Sebastopol; the Turkish medal; the China medal, with clasp for Taku Forts; and the medal for long service and good conduct. He was also recommended for the medal and annuity for long and meritorious recommended for the medal and annuity for long and meritorious service. Through the kindness of Lieutenant Colonel Harvey, commanding the 2nd Battalion (Duke of Edinburgh's) Wiltshire Regiment, this good old soldier was buried with full military honours, and was borne to his grave by the Sergeants of the Wiltshire Regiment.

SIR HERBERT EDWARDES.

TO THE EDITOR.

-In May last Lady Edwardes published the Memerials of Sir,the Life of her celebrated husband, who had no rival in the influence which he exercised over the Mahomedans of India.

Edwardes was equally distinguished as an author, as the chief magistrate of a district, as a general commanding a miscellaneous force opposed to a well disciplined and brave Sikh Army, and as a Statesman who taught the Members of the Indian Government how to retain India during the Mutiny of 1857. Edwardes showed us all an example of tenacity of purpose, relying on the protection of God, which so excited the admiration of Sir William Peel, when he came up country with his sailors of the Shannon.

If Messrs. Allen and Co. would republish the letters of Brahminee Bull to his well-beloved country John Bull, young English Officers would learn how our vast Indian Empire ought to be governed. Sir Henry Lawrence's writings teach us how we ought to govern Sikhs and Hindoos; Havelock instructed his gallant soldiers that victory was sure as coming from God; but fidwardes alone awakened the dormant reverence for the God of Abraham, which slumbers in the breasts of so many fanatical Mahomedans. Your obedient servant, December 15th.

LADY ROSEBERY AT THE ISRAELITE SCHOOL BOMBAY.

Lady Rosebery, accompanied by Mrs. S. D. Sassoon, visited the Israelite School of the Anglo-Jewish Association on Sunday afternoon. As soon as her ladyship entered, the girls attending the institution sang two songs in Hebrew and two more in Mahratti. The following address was then read by Mr. Haiem Samuel Kehimkar, president of the school committee, on behalf of the committee. of the committee:

"Lady Hannah Rosebery, may it please your ladyship,—We, the members of the committee of the Israelite School, hail with great joy the visit of your ladyship to this institution. The establishment of this school is mainly due to the noble and generous exertions of the Anglo-Jewish Association for the establishment of their pass half of the language of the committee of the commit East. We are confident that this kind visit of your ladyship will tend to develop and popularise this institution. Your ladyship will place the committee under the greatest obligation if by your visit you succeed in attracting the kind arithmetic of warry and distinguished polylocation of by your visit you succeed in attracting the kind attention of many a distinguished philanthropist at home to the existence of this ancient but poor community, and to the efforts it has hitherto been making for its amelioration in the midst of adverse circumstances. We feel proud of your ladyship's visit to this school, a visit which will be gratefully remembered by us hereafter. We beg to assure your ladyship that if persons in your position were to follow in your footsteps, the day will not be far distant when this school will be placed on a sound and solid basis. It will then be able to do lasting and substantial good to the community at large by being the medium for the inculcation of moral and religious principles in the minds of Beni-Israel children and for imparting secular knowledge which was inaccessible to them until recent secular knowledge which was inaccessible to them until recent times. Your ladyship's visit to our school is, in the opinion of the committee itself, a proof of the interest and sympathy you feel for the well-being of our community, and we have therefore to offer our sincere thanks for this kindness, and hope that you will continue to cherish the same appreciative sympathy which you have so generously exhibited on this occasion.—We beg to remain, your ladyship's servants, Haiem Samuel Kehimkar, President, Israelite School Committee, and others Directors of this Committee."

The girls then read some portions from the Hebrew Bible. Her ladyship seemed to be much pleased with the recitations, &c., of the girls. The address, and bouquets and garlands of flowers were then presented to her ladyship by the eldest daughter of the president. This was followed by the singing of the National Anthem in English, which terminated the proceedings.

SURGEON R. E. STEWART DAVIES, I.M.S., has been appointed civil surgeon of Mandalay, vice Surgeon-Major E. Fawcett, relieved at his own request.

SIR ROPER AND LADY LETHBRIDGE have left Baroda for Bombay and Hyderabad, Deccan. During their stay they were the guests of Mr. Playford Reynolds, and H.H. the Gaekwar gave a garden party in their honour.

Russian Spies.—The Lahore paper says:—"We reprinted last week a paragraph from a Bombay paper concerning the publica-tion in Russia of the results of a visit paid to Native States in. India by a Russian spy who calls himself, in his book, M. Pashino. With regard to this matter, the presence of Russian spies at the Courts of Native Mahomedan States of Northern India has been alleged more than once of late, on apparently good authority. In Hindu States elsewhere we have heard more than once also of the discovery of traces of a Russian propaganda. The object in both cases is to foster a belief in the Native mind that a Russian invasion of India is imminent and likely to be successful; that it invasion of India is imminent and likely to be successful; that it would be advantageous to the Natives generally and the Native States in particular. There is, of course, no need for surprise, much less for alarm in all this. Russia would not be Russia if she had not spies in E gland's greatest dependency; and Briti h Government will not be British Government when ignorance can prefer the Russian system. The Government when ignorance can prefer the Russian system. The Government approached the course, have more than full information of all that has been traced; and are as watchful as the circumstances demand. By continued good government, by sympathetic treatment of Native claims whenever they are reasonable, and by conspicuous rewards of proved loyalty, all such secret machinations of Russia will eventuate in a mere waste of money, of which Russia has little enough to spare."

LIFE OF

SIR HENRY RAEBURN, R.A.

With Portraits and Appendix by his Great-Grandson,

WILLIAM RAEBURN ANDREW.

Even to look and handle this volume is an enjoyment—nor is the fair ext rnal promise believed by its contents. This brief memoir of the most eminent Scottish portrait painter is agreeably and profitable reading.—Whitehall Review.

This book is the first separate "Life of Racburn," and besides being a good sketch of his wareer as far as it goes, cont.ins a list of his works exhibited in Elimburgh in 1876.—Contemporary Review.

Mr. Andrew writes about "the Reynolds of the North" with all that zealous warmth of appreciation which is due from a Scotchman to a Scotchman, a warmth which grows still more fervid when its object is an ancestor.

—Athensum.

Mr. Andrew does justice to the maniness and amisMilive of Racburn's obaracter, and gives us some delightful glimpses of his intercourse with many of the great Scotamen of his time.—Scotaman.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again schieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it. . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

.... The best service which I ever randered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anythin I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæ im Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

BROAD / ARROW

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE. ESTABLISHED 1833.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its sames support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have m-de the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A sories of Ilustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its corre pondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette "circulates largely throughout India and the Colonics. It is su-piled direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the Frensh, Russian, and other Gover ment-, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, Freuch, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng'and regarding Military affairs.

"VOICE OF INDIA." THE

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing montality (in Bowbay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and consorvative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the fact thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially dosired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes through out England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1886.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 10th December; from Allahabad and Madras to the 8th December; and from Calcutta to the 7th December.

During the past week the Viceroy has visited the State of Mysore. A banquet was given at the Mysore Residency on the evening of the 30th ult, at which, in reply to the Maharajah of Mysore's speech, his Excellency made complimentary allusions to his host. Lord Dufferin proceeded to Bangalore on the 1st inst., being met at Arconum, en route, by Sir M. E. Grant Duff, who, after a short interview, returned to Madras.

LADY DUFFERIN did not accompany the Viceroy on his southern trip to Trichinopoly and Madura, but went straight to Madras, where she joined her children, who have come out by the Mirzapore.

H.E. THE VICEROY arrived at Bangalore on the evening of the 2nd inst., and received addresses from the municipalities of the city and cantonment.

H.E. reached Trichinopoly on the evening of the 5th inst., Madura on the 7th inst., and Tanjore on the 8th inst.

THE RIGHT HON. SIR ROBERT BOURKE, the new Governor of Madras, has arrived. Sir M. E. Grant Duff left Madras on the 7th, and Bombay, for England, by the mail steamer of the 10th inst.

Now that the Secretary of State has given his sanction to the formation of a Legislative Council for the North-West Provinces, rules for its conduct must be provisionally framed, and the members nominated. Both the rules and names of the members proposed have then to be submitted for the approval of the Viceroy. In these circumstances it is probable that some early day in January may be fixed for the first meeting of the Council.

THE Bank of Bombay on Wednesday raised its rate of interest on demand loans on Government Paper to 5 per cent.

SIR OLIVER ST. JOHN has left Quetta for the Bori Cantonments and Sibi.

It is understood that the Government of India, in connection with the revision of the Travelling Allowance Code, have mooted the question of assimilating the travelling allowances of the Bishops of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, whilst on tours of visitation, to those granted to a Judge of the High Court when on inspection duty.

THE Finance Committee has recommended in Madras, as in Calcutta, the amalgamation of the office of Superintendent of Stamps and Stationery with that of the Collector of Customs.

SIR RIVERS THOMPSON referred to his successor the question of the appointment of acting Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal, and Sir Steuart Bayley has selected for the post Mr. J. Ware-Edgar, who will return to India in March next to take up the appointment. Mr. F. B. Peacock joins the Public Service Commission, and afterwards takes furlough; and in the meanwhile, until Mr. Edgar's arrival, the Hon. Mr. Colman Macaulay will officiate as Chief Secretary.

MR. H. M. DURAND, Foreign Secretary to the Govern-!

ment of India, left by last Friday's homeward mail on privilege leave. At one moment, so ugly did prospects look in Afghanistan, his going at all seemed very problematical. On Mr. Durand's return, Mr. W. J. Cuningham, the Under-Secretary, who meantime officiates, takes three months' leave, and when Mr. Cuningham comes back Mr. G. S. Forbes, the Junior Under-Secretary, goes for a like period.

SEVERAL minor encounters with dacoits are reported from Upper Burma.

In an action near Poiboi Minbu on the 30th ult. Colonel Deedes and Corporal Deadman, Rifle Brigade, were severely wounded, and two sepoys killed.

HLA-Oo, the notorious dacoit leader who has been giving much trouble in the Shwabyo district, is being closely pursued. The villagers are joining in the pursuit, and promise to bring him in dead or alive.

THE Ruby Mines Column is continuing to advance against all opposition. It has occupied Sagadoung, at the foot of the hills. Cholera has occurred in the column. There have been thirteen cases, five of which were fatal.

THE dacoits have surprised the police thana at Maha-boung, near Letpadan, killing four Bengalees and wounding one. A sixth is missing. All arms and amunition were carried off.

THERE has been a renewal of disturbances in Lower Burma, and much uneasiness has been caused.

COLONEL CAREY, in command of the Royal Artillery Field Force, has fallen from his horse and sustained injuries which it is feared will be fatal.

It is estimated that the proposed railway from Tounghoo to Mandalay will take three years to construct.

Sixteen blocks of land and buildings are now being bought up by Government at Mandalay for the purposes of a railway station.

SIR F. ROBERTS is considering the question of raising immediately a Burmese Indian police to replace the troops next year.

A COMMITTEE is now sitting at Mandalay to decide on the question of permanent fortifications for the city.

THE 12th Kelat-i-Ghilzais, commanded by Colonel H. A. Little, go to Burma from Lucknow, instead of the 3rd Bengal Infantry from Saugor.

THE Meingoon Prince, who is now at Pondicherry under a kind of surveillance, endeavoured to have an interview with the Viceroy, but the French Governor refused his permission.

OBITUARY.-Lieut. A. A. R. Balfour, 1st Battalion King's Own Light Infantry; Lieut. J. F. Greenwood, 16th Madras N.I.; Major E. A. Trevor, Examiner of Military Works Accounts; Lieut. Fullerton, 2nd Queen's Regiment.

Indian v. British Cotton Goods.—Reporting upon the trade of the Portuguese East African possessions, Consul O'Neil calls special attention to the successful way in which Bombay cotton fabrics are displacing not only the once popular American shirtings, but also the products of the Lancashire looms. "The smaller cost of labour," he writes, "the proximity of the field of production of the raw material, and perhaps a closer study of the wants and tastes of the Natives, through agents who reside upon this coast, and know thoroughly their requirements, have enabled Bombay millowners to compete successfully with those of Manchester." As an instance of this, he mentions a description of cloth called "Kaniki," which used invariably to be of English manufacture, though sent out to Bombay to be made up and dyed before distribution, but which is now manufactured as well as dyed in India. So also with American shirtings, which have almost disappeared before the far cheaper, although inferior, shirtings introduced from Bombay. It is, of course, in such backward communities that the Indian products are most likely to gain a footing. Still, the competition is not of a kind that our manufacturers can afford to ignore.—Economist. manufacturers can afford to ignore. - Economist.

Notes of the Week.

THE latest intelligence by telegraph and post is of peace and progress throughout India generally. Noble lords and ladies and M.P.'s are spending their Christmas in a tour through the three Presidencies, and their example will no doubt be followed in coming years by many who have been so unfortunate as to remain in England during the present time. Christmas in India without the snow and the charitable cant which sentimentalises the season, may not be the ordinary Englishman's idea of Christmas at all, but its realisation will have been found much more pleasant than the experiences of cold and storm which Christmas has just brought to the stay-at-homes in England.

THE Native Press expresses a hope that the aristocratic tourists will carry back with them correct knowledge of India and her wants. We cordially re-echo the hope, although we have our doubts of its fulfilment. The more sensible amongst the travellers can hardly fail to get some glimpses of the truth travelling through a country where nearly three hundred millions of people are ruled by a handful of Englishmen, and so ruled that the Christmas benison of "peace and good-will" is no idle chant as it is in Christian Europe to-day. From Cape Comorin to the Himalayas India is enjoying the blessings of a rule which with all its shortcomings, and they are many, is more golden in its good results than any which her wisest sages of old dreamt of, or the most gifted of her poets tried to foretell in song.

If the travellers come back to England impressed with this fact, and proud of the majesty and mercy of English rule in the East, their journey will not have been taken in vain. But they will have to teach the truth to themselves; they will not learn it from the "irresponsible chatter" of English-speaking Natives.

ONE object of Sir Roper Lethbridge's visit to India has been made public. He has been advocating the cause of the proposed Imperial Institute in commemoration of Her Majesty's Jubilee, and has obtained personal promises of support to the scheme from the Nizam of Hyderabad, the Gaekwar of Baroda, the Maharajahs of Mysore and Indore, the Rajah of Rutlam, Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, and many other Indian notabilities. Having completed a tour through Southern and Western India Sir Roper is now at Calcutta en route to Northern India.

Besides the subscriptions which are being asked for from the Native princes and chiefs on account of the proposed Imperial Institute a general donation is being sought for on behalf of a Jubilee fund and for Lady Dufferin's more practical object. It is to be hoped that the object of one and all of these excellent schemes has been fully explained to the expected donors, for the Native mind is suspicious, and is prone to misunderstand the good intentions of officials who ask for subscriptions to carry out schemes of English inauguration and direction.

The news from Burma is more hopeful, and real progress seems to have been made towards the pacification of the country. According to a telegram from Mandalay on Christmas-eve, Sir Frederick Roberts had expressed the opinion that he anticipated no difficulty in adhering to his original plan of withdrawing the greater part of the troops in March next, as a large number of surrenders was taking place, and this he regarded as a particularly favourable sign.

UNFORTUNATELY, however, the long list of casualities amongst the troops, which we published some weeks ago, has still to be added to. In the Royal Welsh Fusiliers there died of disease one officer and 73 men, six men were killed in action or died of wounds, while eight officers and 280 men were invalided; in the 26th Punjab Infantry there died of wounds one British and one Native officer, one British and one Native officer and 138 men were invalided, four men were killed or died of wounds, and 79 men died of disease; in the Hazara mountain battery one British officer and three men were wounded, 12 men died of disease, and one British and two Native officers and five men were invalided.

It will scarcely be credited, but such is the fact, that there are at the present time about 24,000 Native army pensioners in the Madras Presidency—a number nearly as large as that of the Madras Army itself. This is a matter which has no doubt attracted the attention of the Retrenchment Commission, as it has the attention of every Finance Minister for years past. The conservative spirit, however, of the Madras Government has been always opposed to any interference by the Supreme Government with the Madras Army, which has been allowed to grow into a vast family institution of aged warriors with families and pensioners. The cost of this folly has been enormous, and a sweeping reduction of expenditure next year is likely to be made.

In the meantime it is satisfactory to learn that the scheme for the employment of pensioned Native soldiers has been working well in the Presidency. Of the 24,000 so situated employment has been found for 2,400, or ten per cent of the whole number, in military and civil offices, in the police and by railway companies, and private firms. The reports of the behaviour of the men have been most favourable.

THE retirement of Sir Frederick Halliday, at the age of eighty, from the India Council cannot be said to be a step taken too soon. May it be hoped for that, following this retirement, tardy justice will be done to one who, "sick with time and the world's wrong," still keeps up a brave heart—William Tayler, of Patna renown?

The National Liberal Club does not seem to be quite a favourable habitat for the growth of correct ideas on the subject of Anglo-Indian commercial finance. The other day "A Merchant," dating from that institution, set himself to revolutionise the Trade Returns of British India with a stroke of the pen. In course of Mr. William Fowler's thoughtfully written essay on "the Appreciation of Gold," recently issued by the Cobden Club, that gentleman set out the export and import values of British Indian trade for the three quinquennial periods 1870-85—showing that in the latter two of those lustrums the exports of India had been 723 millions sterling and the imports 441, therefore the Liberal Club "merchant" rushed into the subject and incontinently turned the trade figures upside down—that is, he coolly substituted the exports for the mports and reversed the statistics! Having thus, in a rice, made India roll in imported wealth, the "merchant" proceeded to show, on some "doxy" of his own, that not only had India gained that 280 millions as expressed in sterling figures, but that, as prices are lower in the period, India has also gained ever so many millions more, when quantities of commodities are taken into account! Let optimists and pessimists delight to bark; but when National Liberal "merchants" mistake the ducks of imports for the drakes of exports it is high time to remember that even the much-scorned Thomas Gradgrind had his merits, in that he insisted on "hard facts" for his money. Poor India!

In consequence of the number of medical men who have been sent from Madras to Burma, the Government of India has directed the employment of private medical practitioners to do duty temporarily at civil stations from whence the officers have been removed, on salaries ranging from Rs. 300 to Rs. 350 per month. The Surgeon General, however, does not think it necessary to employ men on such high pay, and has arranged to appoint Assistant Surgeons and Hospital Assistants to do the duty.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

CALCUTTA, DEG. 26.

The Finance Committee, after a session of about eight months, was dissolved on the 20th inst. Mr. Elliott, the president, remains on special duty to wind up the work, with the title of Finance Commissioner. He will be assisted by two of the late members of the Committee, Colonel Filgate and Mr. Bliss. The other members return to their own appointments.

The economies recommended by the Committee to be taken into account in the readjustment of financial contracts between the Supreme and Provincial Governments for the next five years will, it is believed be of the following amounts:—In the North-the Supreme and Provincial Governments for the next nvo years will, it is believed, be of the following amounts:—In the North-West Provinces Rs. 1,85,000, in the Central Provinces Rs. 1,85,000, in Bombay Rs. 27,22,000, in Madras Rs. 16,30,000, in Assam Rs. 1,87,000, in Bengal Rs. 11,52,000—total, Rs. 71,41,000. It is understood that other recommendations not yet considered by the Supreme or Local Governments, and therefore not taken into account on the readjustment of provincial contracts will show a Supreme or Local Governments, and therefore not taken into account on the readjustment of provincial contracts, will show a further saving of about Rs. 15,70,000, of which Bengal contributes about Rs. 3,64,000, Bombay Rs. 3,80,000, Madras Rs. 4,02,000, the Punjab, Rs. 1,88,000, and the North-West Provinces Rs. 1,73,000, the remainder being distributed among the other provinces. Besides the above it is believed that economies have been suggested in contract of the same and the same gested in certain Imperial and miscellaneous departments, amounting to Rs. 43,57,000, making a grand total of about Rs. 130,68,000.

All these economies, however, will not be available at once, as many of the suggested reforms must be deferred during existing incumbencies. On the other hand, the savings specified above do not include possible military economies, which it is understood will not yet be dealt with; or any savings connected with the Presidency Governorships, and home charges, which by order of the Secretary of State were excluded from the scope of the Committee's inquiries, as was also, by order of the Indian Government, any general revision of official salaries. Nor, again, do they include the savings that may result from many recommendations, the effects of which, though they are certain to tend in the direction of economy, do not admit of any trustworthy estimate.

The Public Service Commission has been sitting at Lahore during the last week, and has examined a large number of witnesses. Diverse views were of course expressed; but on one point at least there seems to be general agreement among the witnesses. Diverse views were of course expressed; but on one point at least there seems to be general agreement among the witnesses, namely, that the Statutory Civil Service does not work well in its present form. There was much difference of opinion, however, regarding the proper remedy, some recommending the abolition of that branch of the service, others its extension, under amended rules. The Commission will leave Lahore for Allahabad

The National Indian Congress will assemble in Calcutta to-morrow, and will, it is said, consist of 300 delegates from all parts of the country. Meetings for discussion will be held on Tucsday, Wednesday, and Thursday, while the business will be diversified by excursions and evening parties. It is believed that the subjects of discussion will be similar to those of last wards Romber Congress the introduction of the representative year's Bombay Congress, the introduction of the representative element in the Legislative Councils probably taking the first place. The Mahomedan Literary Society of Calcutta has followed the example of the Central National Mahomedan Association, and has declined to take part in the Congress, giving as a reason that it prefers not to hamper the Government in any way, at a time when the Government is devoting itself to the careful consideration of how best to meet the national aspirations of the natives of India. Some few individual Mahomedans have written letters to the newspapers, expressing disapproval of this resolve; but it seems certain that the great bulk of the Mussulman community will act upon the wise and temperate advice of these two influential societies. these two influential societies.

Last Monday, in presence of a number of spectators from Calcutta and the surrounding districts, the second girder of the new Hooghly railway bridge was successfully placed in position. This bridge is the first cantilever bridge erected in India, and although smaller than the one now under construction at Sukkur, is yet entitled to rank among engineering works of the first magnitude. Its total length is 1,200ft. It consists of three spans, the centre one being 360ft., and each of the others 420ft. long. The work has been carried on for the last three or four years under the able superintendence of Mr. Bradford Leslie, who was unfortunately prevented by illness from witnessing the practical completion of his great task. The girder weighed over 1,000 tons, yet so admirable were the arrangements that the enormous mass was carried over a distance of 420ft., and dropped into its exact position in an hour. All that now remains to be done is comparatively easy; and it is hoped that the bridge will be completed, and Calcutta brought into direct railway communication with Upper India, in March.

It is stated that Lord Dufferin agrees with the general sense of the Indian community as to the expendiency of celebrating the the Indian community as to the expendiency of celebrating the Queen's Jubilee during the present cold season, and that he considers the 9th or 16th of February the best date. Lord Dufferin intends to make an appeal during the Jubilee year to all loyal subjects on behalf of her fund for medical aid to Indian women. She proposes to issue special Jubilee collecting cards, each bearing the Queen's portrait, to ladies willing to collect sum not less than Rs. 10; it being intended that on the return of the cards a memorial volume shall be prepared and presented to the Queen.

A Bill reconstituting the Calcutta Port Trust has been introduced in the Bengal Legislature. It provides that a certain number of Port Commissioners shall be elected by the Chamber of Commerce and the Trades Association.

BENGAL SINECURES

LETTERS TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE. I .- The Sanitary Commissioner.

Dear Mr. President,—I can well understand that the very word "Sinecure" must be an offence unto you; while the thing itself is a monstrosity, to use the words of Dogberry (you used to read Shakespeare in your early days, I believe) "most tolerable and not to be endured." That is just why I write to you about these things. I am filled with a longing which inspired the Fat Boy on a certain memorable occasion: "I wants to make yer flesh creep." But be it understood that when I speak of sinecures I do not refer to posts in which the happy incumbent can happily not refer to posts in which the happy incumbent can happily slumber without any sign of work; there are, alas! no such things in this very practical administrative system of ours. To every one is allotted many tape-bound bundles, and the hand of every one is afforted many tape-bound buildes, and the hand of every man is armed with goose quills to the end that he may spoil fair sheets of blank paper. By a sinecurist I rather mean a person without responsibility, whose manipulation of bundles and scratching with pens, can serve no useful end of her Gracious Majesty's Government. And be it further premised that I write nothing personal. If anything that seems unbind escence me it is not set. sonal. If anything that seems unkind escapes me, it is not set down in malice, and it refers to the impersonal appointment, not to the person who fills it.

Now to our sinecurists. Let us begin with the Sanitary Commissioner. I don't know why nor do I see why I should know. It would be intolerable to have to give a reason for everything, as you, who have been at the head of an Indian Province, must know have been at the head of an Indian Province, must know the state of you, who have been at the head of an Indian Province, must know very well. The Sanitary Commissionership of Bengal is a very remarkable appointment. He is a sort of official Jeremiah, publishing endless volumes of lamentations without the smallest hope of any one ever listening to them. He vaccinates as many of the population as he can catch, and that is all the work, properly so called, that he is allowed to do. The rest of his time is occupied in travelling far and wide at the expense of the State, and in the useless pen scratchings I have already spoken of. The "trivial round" is something like this. He arrives at a country town which has achieved the distinction of being formed into a Municipality. The Vice-Chairman (your chairman is generally a busy person with practical matters to attend to) receives him with due honour, and the Commissioner is personally conducted through the town, peers into all the nasty drains, smells all the bad smells, and ferrets out as many nuisances as the local whitewash is and ferrets out as many nuisances as the local whitewash is unable to conceal.

Having completed his examination, he returns to office, cuts a Having completed his examination, he returns to office, cuts a new pen, and proceeds to compile a long list of all the defects he has observed, and another of the measures urgently required to save the doomed city from disease and death. The communication is received with curious apathy by the Vice-Chairman, unless he is a newly-appointed enthusiast, when he may be stirred by the alarming document to a feverish desire to be up and doing. In either case, a meeting of the Municipal Commissioners is called; an animated debate engage and eventually a grave resolution is an animated debate ensues, and eventually a grave resolution is recorded to the effect that the suggestions of the Sanitary Commissioner are most admirable, and will always be carefully borne in mind, but, unfortunately, the financial resources of the Municipality are so limited that it is impossible to entertain them at present. Or, if the Vice-Chairman is very new and very outhusipresent. Ur, if the Vice-Chairman is very new and very enthusiastic, they go the length of forwarding an application to the local Government for a special grant; on which a cheerful Under-Secretary seizes his swiftly-gliding pen, and is directed to express the Lieutenant-Governor's regret that "the present financial exigencies of the Government render it impossible to accede to the application. Risum teneas, Mr. Elliott? The Sanitary Commissioner has no power to enforce a single reform, and if he had, the people on whom the duty of carrying out the reforms had, the people on whom the duty of carrying out the reforms would rest have no money to spend on them. At the close of the year the Sanitary Commissioner writes a report :-

"A doleful song Steaming up, a lamentation and an ancient tale of wrong."

He says that the registrations of vital statistics are defective; that Bengal villages are dirty; that even towns with the inestimable blessing of Municipal Government are not free from stain, and that his words of warning and exhortation are unheeded. But the Lieutenant-Governor and his Secretaries have heard all this before; and to them, as to the gods who "sat beside their nectar," the report is "a tale of little meaning though the words are strong." So a more or less flabby Resolution is recorded on the report, and the Sanitary Commissioner sets off on another Quixotic tour.

the Sanitary Commissioner sets off on another Quixotic tour.

It may be asked what is the use of the Sanitary Commissioner? and you will probably reply, with your usual frankness: "No use at all." But Government must keep up appearances. If nothing were expended from public funds under the name of sanitation, how could Secretaries indite from time to time the little necessary homilies on other people's disregard of this great subject? Whereas now, if any heretic were to reply to a Government homily, "what do you do to improve matters?" the Secretary can place his hand as near as possible to where his heart ought to be, and reply, with a proud smile: "Behold our Sanitary Commissioner! We pay Rs. 24,000 a year for him, and do you call that nothing?" Nevertheless, I think you might do something with this particular sinecure in your Finance Committee. Believe me, dear Mr. Elliott, yours very truly,

THE TEA TRADE WITH TIBET.

(Englishman.)

Tourists and other travellers from Darjiling to Kalim pong have during the last few days, witnessed the curious spectacle of Tibetan during the last few days, witnessed the curious spectacle of Tibetan coolies laden with Chinese tea from Szechuen wending their way, in full view of many Indian tea gardens, to the Darjiling Bazaar where they dispose of their loads at prices higher than the best Indian teas can command. It might be supposed that the tea they bring is of exceptionally fine quality and flavour, but quite the reverse is the case. It is brick tea, and of the roughest description; so rough, indeed, that the poorest of the Chinese in Szechuen scorn to drink it, and pay ten times its price for their daily beverage. It consists entirely of branches broken off the trees and dried in the sun, the cost price of which at the place of production is less than Rs 4 per cwt., or about half an anna a pound. The process of manufacture is thus described by Mr. Baber, who saw it in Yungching. "Having purchased this tea brushwood, the manufacturers proceed to make it up for the ignorant Tibetan, as they themselves call him. The leaves and twigs, already sun dried, they themselves call him. The leaves and twigs, already sun dried, are steamed in a cloth suspended over a boiler. The mould stands close by, four stout boards set up on end and secured with bitty, the interior having a section of about nine inches by three and a half. Inside it is placed a neatly-woven mat basket somewhat smaller in section than the mould; the steamed and softened leaves with the finer twigs are dropped into the cavity by small quantities at a time, and a little rice water being added to agglutinate the mass, it is consolidated, layer after layer, by forcible blows from a wooden rammer shod with a heavy iron shoe. The coarser sticks are dried and ground to provider and interspected coarser sticks are dried and ground to powder, and interspersed ad libitum among the conglomerate of leaves and twigs. The basket, being flexible and a little smaller than the mould, keeps basket, being flexible and a little smaller than the mould, keeps the cake from taking the angular shape, which it would otherwise assume; the corners being rounded off it is less liable to injury from the hard knocks it will have to encounter on the road to Tibet. The mould is taken to pieces, the cake with its mat envelope is breught back to the fire over which its composition was originally steamed; and, when it is thoroughly dried, the ends of the envelope are closed up, and the long narrow package is ready for transport. On arrival at Tachien-lu the cakes are cut into portions, which then receive the name of 'bricks,' and are repacked. Brick, however, is hardly an appropriate term: they are rather clods of not very closely matted foliage some nine or ten inches by seven, and three inches thick, containing a good deal more stick than leaf." This, then, is the stuff which, after a journey of over a hundred marches, the first seventy of which cross one of the most difficult countries in the world, finds its way through Tibet to Darjiling, and sells there at from Rs. 1 to Rs. 1.8 a pound. to Darjiling, and sells there at from Rs. 1 to Rs. 1.8 a pound. Several maunds have already arrived this winter, and more are on the road. It seems almost incredible that our planters should allow such a state of things to continue under their very noses. There can be no reasonable doubt that, very soon after the present obstructions at the Jelep Pass are removed (and there is present obstructions at the Jelep Pass are removed (and there is reason to think that they cannot be much longer maintained), the whole of the six or seven million inhabitants of Tibet, "whose whole business in life" Mr. Cooper tells us, "seems to be to procure a sufficiency of tea," will derive their supply of this necessary from India. Meanwhile our planters, who are now allowing the prunings of their gardens to be taken away and used as fuel might make for any invent, in brick to any and as fuel, might make a few experiments in brick tea manufacture, with the immediate object of displacing the Chinese article that is now consumed in the midst of their own gardens, and with the further view of being in a position when the time arrives, to supply the vast market north of the Himalayas with Indian tea suited to the palate of the Tibetans.

NATIVES AND THE CIVIL SERVICE.

(Indian Planters' Gazette.)

The question of the employment of Natives in their own Presidencies is one which deserves the closest attention of the Service Commission. When the pay of officers of the Civil Service was fixed, it was regulated on the assumption that men were being paid for exiling themselves during the best years of their life, for separation from wife and children, and for arduous work life, for separation from wife and children, and for arduous work in a climate admittedly unfavourable to Europeans.

Some Native gentlemen very pluckily went to England and competed successfully for the prize of an appointment in the Civil Service. The was no restriction as to choice of Presidency, and these gentlemen naturally selected the Presidency in which their homes were situated, where their expenses would be less than in any other part of India, where they would be within easy distance of their friends and relations, and where, in short, they would enjoy what was, to a Bengali, a very handsome salary, with the least possible discomfort to themselves. They were perfectly justified in so doing, and it is satisfactory to know that the breath of scandal has never blown upon the reputation of any one of of scandal has never blown upon the reputation of any one of these gentlemen who entered the Civil Service by the door of open competition. Government has been so far fortunate in the Native officers whose services it has enlisted; but it is a mistake Native officers whose services it has enlisted; but it is a mistake to allow Natives of India to serve in their own Presidency. Every one who has had much experience in Bengal must be aware of the extensive ramifications of relationship pervading Native society. The obligations imposed on a man with regard to a cousin ten times removed are such as in England would not be regarded as binding in the case of a brother. The term "bhai" is one the comprehensiveness of which few can realise, and it is simply impossible for any Native of Bengal to divest himself of relationship to scores of collaterals, or, in the eyes of those collaterals, to divest himself of the responsibility of more or less looking after their interests. It does not necessarily follow that a Native gentleman who has entered, or is likely to enter the Civil Service under the present rules, or under any rules which might hereafter be laid down by Government, would be likely to recognise this obligation himself, or shape his official course accordingly. The class of society from which he comes is a guarantee that his immediate relatives would not trade upon the position which he by honest hard work had obtained. The evil, however, lies very much deeper; the bulk of the rural companying of Rangel area are deliced course doesn. the position which he by honest hard work had obtained. The evil, however, lies very much deeper; the bulk of the rural community of Bengal are a credulous, easily duped class. Despite all we have been told as to the great intelligence and sudden awakening to political life displayed by them at mass meetings, they are the same childish, bovine gobe mouches they have ever been. With these men, that is with the bulk of the peasantry, neither the future Civilian "in his private life" nor his near relatives ever come into active contact. Their life, as a rule, is passed in Calcutta or in some busy centre of thought: and when assed in Calcutta or in some busy centre of thought; and when they do live on their estates, they trouble themselves but little about their ryots, and consider it infra dig to do the work for which they pay their gomashta and their naib. The naib and the gomashta represent the immediate paramount power to the average Bengali peasant, the police inspector being regarded as a sort of earthquake which at any time might shake the foundations of rural domestic happiness and overturn the entire structure of uneventful village life. Now it is not difficult to see the use to which a gomashta or a naib in the service of even the tenth cousin of a Native Collector or Judge would put the opportunities which Providence and an over-beneficent Government had placed within his reach.

The threat of the interference of the Collector, the master's The threat of the interference of the Collector, the masters bhai, would, we think, be a much more effectual method of screwing out an odd cess or two than would be the decree of a Civil Court in ensuring the payment of rent legitimately due. It is all very well to say that the Native Civilian is unconscious of all this. He is, of course, unconscious of it, and, judging from the gentlemen who are now in the Service, would be the very first to denotince it. But can even Native Civilians themselves say, with the knowledge than power there are father above to the theory with the content of the above to the same than the same of the above to the same than the same of the above to the same than the same of the above to the same than the same of the above to the same than the same of the above to the same than the same of the above to the same than the same of the above to the same than the the knowledge they must have of the character borne by the average gomashta and naib, that the likelihood of such a state of things is imaginary, or that the future which we have drawn is an exaggerated one? This dense ignorance of the extent of the power which the relationship to one in authority gives a man is not, we all know, confined to the lower classes in Bengal.

It is within the experience of almost every official in Bengal that the mere fact of an ordinary acquaintanceship or friendship with the head of a department subjects him to endless applications for the use of the influence he is supposed to have for the benefit of "your poor petitioner." If this be the case with European officers, after the long experience which Natives have had of their habits and ways of life, what must it be amongst the Natives themselves. The fact is that Natives have not the Natives themselves. The fact is that Natives have not realised, and seemingly never will realise, that the private friendships existing amongst Europeans have little or no influence upon their official life. They think that if a Collector entertains the Lieutenant-Governor or puts up his Secretary, that his time is spent in ear-wigging these officials, or else they look upon him as a sort of a fool who has grossly misused his opportunities. Natives themselves put forward claims real or imaginary whenever they have a chance, and it is easy to conceive the influence which a Native Collector's "bhai" could acquire by the mere fact of his relationship with the big man. The temptation to overrate the influence which he would be supposed to exercise over this relative would be very strong—too strong we fear—for many of the weaker vessels amongst a Bengal village community and dangerously strong in the hands of an unscrupulous man. and dangerously strong in the hands of an unscrupulous man. For the sake of the people, for the sake of the officers themselves, it would be wise, therefore, to find employment for Native Civilians outside their own Presidencies, and we trust that the suggestion may carry weight with the Commission now about to issue.

CHEETAH HUNT AT HYDERABAD.

(Correspondent Bombay Gazette.)

His Excellency the Viceroy having expressed desire to see a little cheetah sticking before he left, Afsur Jung arranged for a morning's sport on the plains near Golconda. The Viceroy, accompanied by the Nizam and a large staff, drove from the Residency towards Golconda. On arriving at about within a mile from the fort he was met by Afsur Jung, Colonel Dobbs, Captain Farrell and a few more local sportsmen. Elephants were provided for such of the visitors who did not care to ride, and a splendid lot of horses for the remainder from the Nizam's own stable. The Viceroy and his Highness mounted on one elephant and then the Viceroy and his Highness mounted on one elephant, and then the Viceroy and his Highness mounted on one elephant, and then the whole party made across country, for nearly a mile towards a plain, where a pair of Master Spots awaited them. The ground was well suited to the sport, as it was slightly undulating, and in some parts rocky, thus giving "spots" fair play. On arriving on the ground, the visitors, who were on elephants, took up their position on a knoll about 500 yards from where the cheetahs were caped, and awaited the issue of events. As there were two cheetahs, it was decided to divide the party into two lots, the first five going at the first animal. The five consisted of Lord W. Beresford, Mr. Gordon, Afsur Jung, Captain Farrell, and another. When the Gordon, Afsur Jung, Captain Farrell, and another. When the trap was pulled down, Master Spots, evidently not liking the look of things, refused to stir, but after a minute or so, he made up his mind, and made a rush for a small village a few hundred yards in rear. He had not gone far, however, when he was overtaken by Lord William who drove his snear into the bruta's loins, where he Lord William, who drove his spear into the brute's loins, where he left it sticking, the speed he was going at forcing him to let go. The cheetah, however, who did not seem to mind it much, made rapidly for a mud-walled compound, into which he crawled, and would not stir. This was getting exciting, so regardless of the "five" order, the remainder of us galloped down to the scene of action, only in time to see "spots" walk quietly in through the open door of a mud hovel in the corner of the compound. What the owner's feelings were (if he happened to have been at horse) the owner's feelings were (if he happened to have been at home) I cannot say—not very comfortable, at any rate. However, there he was with just the end of his tail sticking out of the door, and apparently having no intention of coming out. At length Afsur Jung and Captain Farrell decided to go and spear him as he was, and this this they did in a very plucky manner, polishing poor "spots" off in no time. The feat was not one of the easiest, as the door of the hut was only about four feet high, and it appeared to be quite dark inside. After a few minutes' rest we all formed up in line and awaited the untrapping of Spots No. 2, who, when his box fell about his ears, made no hurry to get off, but took a good look all round. I happened to be on the right of the line, and was just congratulating myself on my luck, as I fancied he would break towards the jungle just in front of me. When the brute, evidently determined to throw away his life, turned to his left and made for the open country, away we all went as hard as hoof could carry us, Lord William well to the front again, Afsur Jung and Captain Farrell close on his heels, and the remainder of us well up. This cheetah is gamesome, and he goes straight and as hard as he can. Any amount of dust. Lord William goes for him. Suddenly the cheetah turns around and goes for him. Two pair of hoofs and one pair of soles in the air, horse and man are down, the cheetah having turned and run right under Lord William's horse. Away he goes again, three or four round him. He makes for the tank near at hand. It is his only chance, but before he can reach it Captain Farrell gives him the coup de grace under the shoulder, and down he goes dead. And so ended the cheetah hunt. Lord William picked himself up none the worse for his fall, and was presented with the two bodies, as he had got the first open in each. There was a little doubt about the second one, but the benefit was given to the visitors. There were some of the Viceroy's Staff who had never been out at this sort of thing before, and they seemed to enjoy it immensely. After the conclusion of the hunt the Nizam drove the Viceroy back to the Residency in his own four-in-hand.

INDIA AND THE FEDERATION OF THE EMPIRE. (Bombay Gazette.)

The presence of the Earl of Rosebery in Bombay at this time, and the possibility that he may make use of the opportunity which his fellow-countrymen will give him on St. Andrew's Day of saying something about public affairs, bring two interesting facts to notice. We may forget for the moment that this most recent addition to the list of our distinguished cold weather resistors has with a solution to the list of our distinguished cold weather recent addition to the list of our distinguished cold weather visitors has with marked ability held the portfolio of Foreign Affairs for a season. But there is no reason why we should not be obstinately mindful of the fact that Lord Rosebery is chairman of the Imperial Federation League, and that that energetic organisation has not as yet specifically included India within the ganisation has not as yet specifically included India within the range of its tolerably extensive vision. In its most recent authentic deliverance the League has observed a silence about this country which we trust Lord Rosebery, if he think it worth while to refer to Imperial Federation, will not imitate. For it was a somewhat striking production to which the chairman of the League attached his signature shortly before leaving for India. It spoke of a stage having been reached in the movement towards federation which deserved serious attention and renewed effort federation which deserved serious attention and renewed effort. Her Majesty, through her Ministers, had affirmed the conviction that there is on all sides a growing desire to draw closer in every practicable way the bonds which unite the various portions of the Empire, and had authorised communication to be entered into with the principal colonial governments with a view to the fuller consideration of matters of common interest. This the League regarded as an official recognition of their movement, and they have consequently urged their members in the various colonies to obtain careful consideration and hearty co-operation for such proposals as might be made by the Imperial Government. Now all this is satisfactory enough, so far as it goes, and Lord Rosebery and his friends may be congratulated upon the success with which their efforts to educate public opinion and ministerial opinion have been accompanied. It is not often that so large a result is accomplished in so short a time. But to us in India the success which the League have gained acceptance for their main idea is not more striking than the success with which they have managed to limit it on the side on which limitation is most in conflict with any large idea of drawing closer—to quote the terms employed in the Queen's Speech,—"the bonds which unite the various portions of the Empire." We do not know if the Imperial Federation League and Her Majesty's Government give an elastic meaning to the term "colonies," and if India is included in that programme of Colonial propaganda upon which the Ministry and the League have set out. But nothing is known of any representations that have been made to the Indian Government on the subject, and we are able to say that no effort has as yet been made to enlist the Press of India in the great work. We assume therefore that it is in the designs of the League to "federate the Empire" without thought of the gem which figures most conspicuously in the Imperial Crown.

Lord Rosebery has come to India in most excellent company, but we wish that he had brought with him a certain "Edward A. Freeman, D.C.L., LL.D., Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford." For although Mr. Freeman is given to a sometimes wearying reiteration, and although he occasionally trifles over words when he ought to be grappling with things, he has seized the forgotten factor in this problem of Imperial Federation with a tightness of grip that is quite characteristic of him. We need not make much of his argument that there can be no such thing as Imperial Federation inasmuch as what is Imperial cannot be Federal, and what is Federal cannot be Imperial. Voltaire got much more amusement out of the game of word-splitting when he told us that the Holy Roman Empire was not Holy, that it was not Roman, and that it was not an Empire. We know nevertheless that it lasted from Charles the Great to Francis the Second, and that it was a tolerably conspicuous power in the world for a season. Mr. Freeman has, however, impressed the author of the Queeu's Prorogation Speech with a sense of the importance of a right use of terms. We read therein nothing about Federation, and the word "Imperial" is as carefully excluded as the name "India." And yet the purposes to which the League has directed the attention of the public and of the Government are purposes of common interest to the Colonies and to this country. They are defined to "the pleajne upon a satisfactory has of the defence of the terest to the Colonies and to this country. They are defined to be "the placing upon a satisfactory basis of the defence of the ports and the commerce of the Empire in time of war, and the promotion of direct intercourse, commercial, postal and telegraphic between the several countries of the Empire in time of peace, and any other means for securing the closer federation or union of all parts of the Empire. Now there are objects as closely connected with the interests of this country as with those of New Zealand, of Canada, or of the West Indian colonies. India, with an external trade amounting to a hundred and fifty millions sterling a-year—half of it with the United Kingdom—has certainly as much concern in the defence of the ports and commerce of the Empire as, say, New South Wales, with an external trade estimated at forty millions, New Zealand, with a trade of fifteen millions, or Victoria with a trade of thirty-five millions. India, to take a minor example, has a close interest in ocean postage, as it would have shown if the recent renewal of the English mail contracts had been submitted to a Council of the Empire in which a vigilant representative of this country had been allotted a place. We might feel that something less than justice was being done us if the defence of Sydney harbour were to absorb the attention and the resources of some such council, and our own harbour were to be left to Providence and our enemies for want of representation upon this Imperial Committee of public safety and well-being. And it may be taken for granted that in any conflict of interests between the represented and the unrepresented, the interests that were represented would be certain to prevail. We in Bombay have seen how slowly the defensive needs of an Eastern harbour impress themselves upon the recognition of the authorities at home. The process wauld be slower if ever the Colonies, through the ingenious contrivance of an Imperial Federation which excluded some of the most important parts of the Empire, were enabled to assert a preferential claim upon its defensive resources.

No one pretends that a scheme of Imperial Federation is impossible. It will be time to suggest that when the Australian colonies have failed a little more completely than they have yet done in the endeavour to federate, as people rather loosely call it in their case, their own particular portion of the Empire. The growth of a genuine and general desire in the colonies to resort to common action for the attainment of common ends will lead, if left to work itself out in a natural way, to the formation of the right mechanism, and whether the mechanism be called Imperial Federation or Colonial Federation, or Federation of any sort at all, will matter little to any one but Mr. Freeman. The possibilities of success in this direction are not reduced by the fact that those who are leading the movement in England steadfastly refuse to commit themselves to any particular scheme, preferring to rely upon the initiative of the colonists themselves. But we in India, while doubtful if any of the largor dreams to which federating enthusiasm has given rise in our day will be realised just yet, are all this time wondering why a country upon whose Sovereign the Imperial Federation League. We can only hand over Lord Rosebery and the League to Mr. Freeman, not when he is in his word-splitting mood, but when he is provokingly anxious that we should think of what we are talking about. "Whenever," he says, "the thing is to talk big about 'Empire,' its greatness, its prestige, all about the dominion on which the sun never sets, all about the drum roll of the British army going the round of the world, then India is the dearest, the most cherished, the sublime part of the talk. 'Imperial' interests, 'Imperial' greatness, 'Imperial' everything seems specially at home in that land. It is the specially 'Imperial' soil. 'Our Eastern Empire,' Our Indian Empire,' is the grandest subject of all for magnificent eloquence." We need not follow Mr. Freeman in his estimate of the grotesque displacement of political power that would follow if India w

THE SHANS AND THE BURMANS.

(Rangoon Gazette.)

It is a pity that the Shans who are trying to stir up the people living near the ruby mines, to resist the British occupation of that particular district, have not a little more reasoning ability. The uselessness of the proceeding can be demonstrated almost like a proposition in Euclid. In 1824, the King of Burma, then ruling over a tract of country fairly enough called an Empire, was unable to resist the British occupation of his country. In 1852 his successor the King of the curtailed, but still magnificent country of Burma found the struggle equally futile, and had to submit to a still further reduction of territory. In 1885 the remainder of the kingdom of Burma fell almost without a blow. One would think it did not need very great reasoning power to draw the inference that it must be useless for the people of a single district to attempt a resistance, which the three most High and Mighty Kings above mentioned tried in succession, and tried in vain. Reasoning, however, is not the strong point of semi-barbarous and uncivilised peoples.

The mere fact of such a proposal having been seriously made, shows how little real cohesion there was among the peoples inhabiting the country we are accustomed to call Burma. It is not only that it is inhabited by a multitude of different races, speaking different languages, and professing various creeds; but even those who are nominally Burmese by race and Buddhists by creed do not seem to understand that the fall of their king necessarily implies a change of rule for themselves. The people of the ruby mine district, for instance, seem to argue the matter out somewhat as follows:—"Yes, it is true King Theebaw has fallen and the British are in possession of the capital, but it does not follow that they are to quietly take possession of the whole country. We are the virtual owners of the mines still, as we always have been, and we intend to remain [so. If the foreigners want to oust us we will fight." That the British should show any forbearance does not, of course, enter into their calculations at all. The Burmese kings would have taken every ruby in the mines could they have done so; and the people know this perfectly well, and argue that the new-comers will at once endeavour to oust them altogether from so favoured a spot as one which yields precious gems. Nor will anything convince them to the contrary, until we actually have taken possession and have not ousted them.

does not, of course, enter into their calculations at all. The Burmese kings would have taken every ruby in the mines could they have done so; and the people know this perfectly well, and argue that the new-comers will at once endeavour to oust them altogether from so favoured a spot as one which yields precious gems. Nor will anything convince them to the contrary, until we actually have taken possession and have not ousted them.

This want of cohesion among the people has been a great advantage to us in several ways, for it has put the Karens entirely on our side. But in Upper Burma there has not been timely et to win the confidence of any one section of the people, as, thanks mainly to the exertions of the American missionaries, the confidence of the Karens has been won. Every district in the new province has practically to be subdued by force fi:st; and when the peaceful and industrious portion of the population see that we are really able to protect them from lawlessness, and that we do not attempt to take all their gains from them, they will cease to help the criminal classes, except in so far as fear drives them to do sc. But meantime every defeat of the rebels loses most of its moral effect, for the others do not see that it is a defeat inflicted on their own forces. They do not in the least realise that the struggle is one between anarchy and order, and that every district gained to the side of order is so much loss to the opposite side. They are united in opposition to British rule and order, but lose the force of union because each leader is fighting for his own hand.

It is this disunion on their part that constitutes our strength, and must give us the complete victory finally, as it has given the victory to the party of order throughout the civilised world. But in such a struggle a complete and final conquest must be an affair of some time. It is impossible to bring on a fight that will prove in any way decisive. We must be content to progress slowly, the actual duration of the struggle depending mainly on two conditions. The first and most essential is to inspire wholesome awe on the part of the lawless classes everywhere throughout the country. This can be done by the troops if they are not fettered by the ultra-humanitarianism of the civil power. It is this essential first step that renders some initial severity necessary, and makes it, moreover, the truest kindness. The second condition is to open out the country by means of roads and railways, so that the isolation of districts may cease, and that the inhabitants of the most remote towns and villages may realise that they now form component parts of one great nation, as they never did in the days of the Native kin, s. The Shans may, or may not, be included in this Burma of the future; but once the idea of nationality is fairly grasped by the people of such districts as the ruby mines, it will be useless for outsiders to try and stir them up into futile opposition. Even in Lower Burma, disorder was mainly confined to inaccessible districts; and were they thrown into contact with the rest of the world by means of a railway, the people of the ruby mines would not have listened to such suggestions as those made by the hostile Shans.

At the Sessions, Dec. 1st, Mr. Phillips, on behalf of the Advocate-General of Bengal, entered a nolle prosequi in the case of Empress versus Robert Knight, and the presiding Judge allowed the case to be withdrawn, and discharged the prisoner without calling on him to plead, holding that the trial began with his surrendering to his bail. The learned counsel pointed cut that to call on Mr. Knight to plead would be embarrassing; because if he pleaded not guilty, it would detract from the value and sincerity of the apology he had made; and if he pleaded guilty he would have to be sentenced.

It, therefore, insists the petition deals with a want which is seriously felt throughout India, and which calls for a early remedy.

MADRAS.

FROM an analysis of statistics maintained by the inspecting officers of the Educational Department, it has been found that indigenous schools in the Madras Presidency are being rapidly brought under State supervision, and that, should the present rate of progress continue for a few years more, the whole of them will then be under the supervision of the Educational authorities, the one thing needful being that the Educational Department and Local Boards have sufficient funds at their disposal to admit of substantial outlay on elementary education.

It is a general opinion that a prince of a large province like Mysore has supreme command over his subjects. This theory has been altogether destroyed by the recent strike at the Mahanas been altogether destroyed by the recent strike at the Maharajah's stables. The Rajah is supposed to be all-powerful, but yet he is controlled by such menials as horse-keepers. The disturbance arose under the following circumstances. His Highness, while visiting his stables, noticed one of the grooms washing his hands in the water used for the mixing the bran supplied to the horses. The Rajah flew into a passion over this affair, and immediately ordered the unfortunate man a dozen lashes with the cat-o'-nine tails. Many another potentiate would affair, and immediately ordered the unfortunate man a dozen lashes with the cat-o'-nine tails. Many another potentate would have ordered the head of the man, instead of the castigation. The man took his flogging in good part, and it was severe no doubt, but he submitted. Not so his companions, Pindaries by birth and creed; they felt as if a serious wrong had been done to at least one of their members; they resisted the order; their protest was not listened to and the unfortunate syce received his dozen with the Maharajah standing over to see that the work was executed properly. The next day the revenge came. Every syce left his Highness's service, and eighty-five were on strike. The stables of his Highness were deserted. He endeavoured to obtain other assistance, but failed. So, in despair, he telegraphed to Bangalore and Madras. A number of men came up for work. The syces, who are all Pindaries, were equal to the occasion, and The syces, who are all Pindaries, were equal to the occasion, and they gave the new-comers a chance to go back to their own country or die mysteriously. They chose the former, and they are now gone. The Pindaries are masters of the situation. The country or die mysteriously. They chose the former, and they are now gone. The Pindaries are masters of the situation. The best of the joke is that his Highness wants them very particularly just now in consequence of the Viceroy's visit. Every effort has been made to supply the vast loss of the grooms, but it has failed. A few came up the other day from Bangalore, and continued working for a day. The same evening they were waylaid and thrashed, the next they were all gone, and the Rajah was a badly off as ever. He has now just a few pariah horse-keepers who risk the thrashing and the threat to be made to disappear from this world mysteriously, in return for a good salary. This who risk the thrashing and the threat to be made to disappear from this world mysteriously, in return for a good salary. This very small contingent is supplemented by members of the Maharajah's bodyguard, who have been forced to do this work. His Highness seems determined to hold out against the demands of the horse-keepers on strike, and it would appear that the grooms are equally determined to hold out on their part. What the Pindaries want is the dismissal of the Native Master of the Horse, who has rendered himself obnoxious, and who they believe advised his Highness to order the flogging to the erring syce. What with meeting the Viceroy and other arrangements in connection with his Excellency's visit, this strike of horse-keepers, his Highness has quite enough to do to keep him occupied.

This objection has apparently been got over. #### COLONIAL FRANCE.*

Never, perhaps, has the apportionment of natural aptitudes, which St. Paul indicates in his well-known phrase, "Dividing to everyone severally as He will," been, as regards nations, better illustrated than by the history of the French colonial possessions.

The French began colonial enterprise with, in not a few cases, the advantages of priority, for the hardy sons of Brittany were equal to any adventure, and vied in daring with the "hardy Norseman," who forms the burden of the well-known song. We hear, for instance, of the presence of Malouines (St. Malo has ever been the home of the boldest seamen of France) on the Senegal coast as early as A.D. 1364. The facts that in Canada the old colonists of French descent are almost more enthusiastically British than ourselves (Britannis Britanniores, as was said of them not long since) must not make us forget that the original colonisation by Europeans of North America was almost entirely French. In India they ran us close in the contest for supremacy in that peninsula. For nearly two centuries French colonial possessions "equalled, if they did not surpass, our own."

It is among the most interesting problems of modern history to investigate fundamentally why it is that the colonies of France had never come to be parts of the body politic. They seem to be excrescences, and of unnatural growth. They are, nominally, more closely connected, politically speaking, with the mother country than are our own dependencies, for they have a direct representation in the Paris Chamber of Deputies, and are thus formally incorporated into the Kingdom, Empire, or Republic which may at the time be the form of Government in France. Moreover, they have very considerable subventions from the Moreover, they have very considerable subventions from the mother country, but for which, indeed, scarcely a single French colory would be able to make both ends meet. The French, too, with much wisdom, have fostered the prosperity of their outlying possessions by a discreet system of colonial banks, managed in part by Government officials, and having its headquarters in Paris.

But, notwithstanding all this artificial aid, the French Colonies have never shown that spontaneous prosperity which has been so striking a feature of our own colonial history. It is, for instance, curious to read, as regards one island, Guadaloupe, which, in the course of successive wars, was, like most of the Antilles, alternately under French and English domination, that (p. 173) it was more prosperous during the brief period of our sway than it had been under its previous masters. Nor is it easy to conceive a greater contrast than that which at this moment exists between the British and the French possessions in Guiana, analogous though they are in climate, soil, and natural productions.

The frequency with which we ceded, on the conclusion of The frequency with which we ceded, on the conclusion of every peace, what we had gained by the war which preceded it, is more striking than gratifying. There is scarcely a single island belonging to the French Dominions, which has not, at one time or another, been in our possession, and, in many cases, the "retrocession," which in variably took place, was an act of fatuity as great as that which, in a similar manner, restored Java to the Dutch at the close of the "long war."

Captain Norman has taken considerable pains to narrate the history of each colony, and has shown in each case how the vicissitudes of war and peace affected its prosperity. Space forbids our following him into details, and, so far as concerns India, the matter which will most interest our readers, our author can, as he well remarks, not do better than refer us to Colonel Malleson's excellent works on the French in India, and their final struggles there, for evidence how nearly the French became masters, not alone of Pondicherry, Chandernagore, Mahé, and minor settlements, 194 square miles in all, but of the entire continent of India (p. 81).

It is more to the purpose to inquire why it is that the French are so anxious to possess outlying possessions which are mostly unprofitable? Something is, no doubt, due to sentiment. It is "glorious" to have colonies in all parts of the world, even though few Frenchmen, indeed, have a very clear idea of their whereabouts. But reflection constrains us to agree with Captain Names that this is hy no means the only or away the chief Norman, that this is by no means the only, or even the chief, cause of French colonial expansion. "Dreams of a revival of a Colonial France," says he, "very naturally bring with them dreams of the destruction of British trade. . . French colonies lie in the fairway of every single trade route that we possess. Their squadrons could swoop down on the flank of our great commercial highways, and ruin our maritime supremacy. Algeria and Tunis are destined to become the headquarters of a groupe de combat,* which should sweep the British flag from the Mediterranean. Obock would hermetically seal the Red Sea; Saigon and Haiphong would paralyse our China trade; Réunion and Madagascar would give shelter to groups destined to dominate the Indian Ocean; Tahiti and New Caledonia would be a source of grave danger to Australia," &c. (p. 294). Captain Norman, indeed, shows himself fully aware that this is a game at which two can play. But he no less plainly intimates, that, if we are to be one of the players, it behoves us to see that our pieces are in order, and that we begin the game on equal terms. We fear that we are as yet far from being in this position, or from realising that we are as yet far from being in this position, or from realising to what an extent we fall short of it. We cannot too soon place ourselves in a state of readiness for contingencies which any day may bring forth; and woe be to the Government which may be in power when the nation is rudely aroused by some naval disaster from its dream of (a really non-existent) security!

Our author duly metes out reprobation of the tortuous courses

so eminently characteristic of the diplomacy of France, and which are nowhere more remarkable than in her dealings with the barbarous, or semi-barbarous, potentates whose dominions have, barbarous, or semi-barbarous, potentates whose dominions have, from time to time, been appropriated by her as colonies. He does, too, full justice to the great assistance in the absorption of territory which the State has throughout received from the Jesuit, and other Romanist, missionaries, though, in one or two passages, he seems to leave out of sight the great difference in this respect which the avowed anti-clerical policy of the latter Governments of the Republic may be expected to bring about.

The book is furnished with a map, one glance at which shows the perilous proximity of French settlements to every one of our Dependencies, and with a set of tables giving the latest and most authentic information on the size, population, sources of revenue, cost, and exports and imports, of each French colony. It is carefully got up, and pleasantly and impartially written; the soldier peeps out in the hearty admiration of deeds of derring-do, on whichever side; and the work may be commended as a complete whichever side; and the work may be commended as a complete hand-book to the subject of which it treats.

EARLY LETTERS OF THOMAS CARLYLE.+

"Express biography of me I had really rather that there should none." Such was Carlyle's recorded wish. Nevertheless, Mr. be none." Such was Carlyle's recorded wish. Nevertheless, Mr. Froude thought otherwise, and, as is well known, published an account of the illustrious dead, which "has not approved itself to many of those who knew Carlyle best. It may be a striking picture, but it is not a good portrait." To prepare a faithful and unvarnished work has not been considered practicable, as such a volume would have to compete for public favour with a rival already in "possession of the field;" and to be successful more descripted and exparienced as Mr. Froude. would need an author as gifted and experienced as Mr. Froude. So it has been thought best merely to print "some of Carlyle's letters in suchwise that with his Reminiscences they might serve as a partial autobiography, and illustrate his character by unquestionable evidence. They do not, indeed, afford a complete questionable evidence. They do not, indeed, afford a complete portrait, but, so far as they go, the lines will be correct."

A glance at their contents will serve to remove, perchance, not a few popular errors regarding this much known, but little understood, man of letters. He first appears in this volume as a mathematical master at Annan Academy, on a modest pittance of about £65 a-year. He disliked his work, as might have been expected; but he did his duty, laying by money against a rainy day, and solacing himself with his books, the sole companions of his leisure hours. "He was abundantly lonesome, uncomfortable, and out of place there." But to a sensitive and highly-strung mind like that of Carlyle the drudgery of "schoolmastering" was irksome and intolerable; so after ten years he resigned his post, inksome and intolerable; so after ten years he resigned his post, and scraped together a precarious existence by taking private pupils. The change of life, however, had necessitated a change of locality, and henceforth Edinburgh was the adopted home of the struggling litterateur. But times were hard, and as he had foresworn "teaching and preaching," and as the Law, to which he had turned his attention was irksome to him, he bethought himself of his pen as a means of subsistence

Carlyle's first literary venture was an article for the Edinburgh Review, which he addressed to the Editor, Francis Jeffrey, with a request that he would send it back "if it did not suit the purpose." "I have got no answer," innocently writes the disappointed author, so the door was slammed in his face; but better times were at hand, and he soon found "job work" on the Edinburgh Encyclopædia, chiefly in writing lives of various celebrities, and owing to an introduction which had been given him to Brewster now and again a work for translation was placed in his hands. now and again a work for translation was placed in his hands.

miserable, dark, sick and heavy-laden years, years, withat, the monotonous sadness of which was broken by the acquaintance of Miss Welsh, his future wife.

Now begin glimpses of the man utterly at variance with all preconceived motions of this "rough and rugged diamond." His mother, a most pious woman, was wont to address her son warnings and exhortations. Did he resent this? Far otherwise. His letters to home are a model of filial affection, of the deepest love, of kindly submission to the advice and admonitions of who had given him birth. If he does not appear as an absolutely religious man, at least he seems to have been inspired with a due and abiding sense of the reverence due to the Maker of Heaven and Earth. Instead, too, of finding a brusque, callous, indifferent denizen of the world—a sort of human waif and stray—he is revealed in these most attractive letters as affectionate, observant, thoughtful for the wants of others, and ever struggling out of a bare pittance to do some little act of kindness to those at home. As regards, too, his future spouse, his correspondence breathes a tone of loving admiration and passionate regard, quite out of accord with Mr. Froude's sensational picture of the selfish, indifferent husband of after years. If this were the case most assuredly the man must have sally degenerated as years rolled by; between sixty and thirty there must, indeed, have been a great gulph great gulph.

Space precludes further reference to these most charming volumes, in which the mighty dead still live, and in which the picture is painted by the master's own hand. Magna est veritas

THE LIFE OF SIR ROBERT CHRISTISON, BART.*

Christison, born in 1793, was the son of a Professor of Humanity in the University of Edinburgh. Alluding to his ancestry, paternal and maternal, he lived to boast that it might pretend to be fairly decent, "with a pirate at one end of the line and a robber at the other." His infancy appears to have been uneventful. At the age of six he was placed under the charge of a local Dominie, by name Dr. Milne, to whose teaching he must have owed much, since after two years, when he proceeded to the High School, he speedily "crept out of the ruck." In the first year he was fourth boy at the examination, in the second year third, in the third year second, and in the fourth dux. As amongst young Christison's contemporaries of note and intellect was the future Sir David Dundas, Solicitor-General for England, it may be assumed that the standard of learning was by no means contemptible. From the High School he proceeded to the University of Edinburgh, through which he passed with credit, if not with distinction. Then came the choice of a profession. The youth wanted to be a civil engineer, but his father bade Christison, born in 1793, was the son of a Professor of Humanity oniversity of Edinourgh, through which he passed with credit, in ot with distinction. Then came the choice of a profession. The youth wanted to be a civil engineer, but his father bade him "think over the question again." Two minutes' reflection decided the matter, and the young man declared himself ready to betake himself to medicine.

In November, 1815, Christison, matriculating as a medical student, took his seat as a pupil of Alexander Monro, the third of a race who for 126 continuous years, had filled the anatomical chair in the Scottish capital. At the end of ten years Dame Fortune began that shower of good luck which, as years rolled on, she loved to pour into the lap of her favourite son, who, consequent on the illness of a companion older than himself, was installed temporarily as a physician's assistant in the Royal Infirmary, and became thereby "a full fledged physician, with all his formidable responsibilities," and this, be it rememwith all his formidable responsibilities," and this, be it remembered, at the age of twenty, when most youths are wasting their time, losing their opportunities, and in not a few cases ruining their health in the pursuit of what is called pleasure. After two years passed profitably and successfully in various minor positions, which brought the young doctor into contact with many distinguished men of science, the embryo Professor turned his steps towards London, and entered as a student in St. Bartholomew's Hospital, whence he proceeded to Paris, in order to study the Continental system of medicine.

His curriculum of studies was now complete, and so high did

His curriculum of studies was now complete, and so high did his reputation stand that, though only then about twenty-five years of age, he was selected to fill the responsible and coveted post of Professor of Medical Jurisprudence in the University of Edinburgh, an appointment which he held with considerable distinction for a period of ten years. He was now on the leader of Edinburgh, an appointment which he held with considerable distinction for a period of ten years. He was now on the ladder of success. In 1832 he became Professor of Materia Medica and Therapeutics in the same University, and filled the chair in that branch of science for the unparalleled interval of forty-five years. Christisson was also Professor of Clinical Medicine, Dean of the Faculty of Medicine, and Member of the University Court appointed by the Senators. On two occasions he was selected to be President of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh, while from 1858 to 1877 he represented the Crewn for Scotland in the General Medical Council of Great Britain and Ireland. But the prize of his profession which perhaps brought him into more the prize of his profession which, perhaps, brought him into more repute, was the distinguished post of Physician in Ordinary to the Queen for Scotland. In this sphere of action for thirty-four years (1848 to 1882) he held a high place—perhaps the highestprofession of medicine; for though the opportunities of killing or curing Royalty may, perhaps, have been conspicuous by their absence, nevertheless the position was indicative of high-standing, being invariably reserved for the élite of the physicians of Edinburgh. It will not, therefore, occasion surprise that after fifty years of hard and successful work a baronetcy was offered for Christison's acceptance—"as a compliment to myself, to the medical profession in Scotland, and to the University of Edinburgh." The distinguished honour was at first declined, on the score of inadequacy of fortune: but in the end friends persuaded score of inadequacy of fortune; but in the end friends persuaded him that refusal would be ungracious, and from 1871 till his death the High School lad figured in the world as Sir Robert Christison, Bart. He died on 27th January, 1882, full of years, honours, and, it may be hoped, riches

Such is a brief outline which the filial affection of sons has given of the career of a father of whom they are naturally and justly proud. At a time, too, when the struggle for life is getting keener and keener as each succeeding year rolls by, the lesson comes haply to the world that diligence and perseverance, and a desire to make the best use of opportunities selden fail in the end desire to make the best use of opportunities, seldom fail in the end to lead their possessor to the goal of success. Sir Robert Christison started in life with no advantages of position, of wealth, of son started in life with no advantages of position, of wealth, of family interest, of personal friends; he owed his advancement entirely to his own right arm, and what he did others may do likewise. The public owe a debt of gratitude to his family in presenting thus faithfully a plain, unvarnised account of the man as he lived, and moved, and had his being. The work is skilfully compiled, affording a clear insight into the character of the man whose life it narrates; and, withal, in spite of medical hiatuses, which none but a professional reader would be likely to grasp, there is sufficient anecdote to make the biography readable, interesting, and popular.

THE CAMPAIGN OF FREDERICKSBURG.+

"A soldier," said Frederick the Great, "should learn war before making it, and then strive to put his science into practice." Such is the argument which has supplied a "line officer" with the idea of presenting to his brethren in arms—especially the volunteers—a careful and exhaustive analysis of the Campaign of Fredericksburg (Nov.—Dec., 1862). The subject is well chosen, for both the Federals and the Confederates were more or less raw recruits, while their Generals had not, save with few exceptions, been reared in the art of war. The failures, therefore, of such men in such circumstances cannot be otherwise than pregnant with instruction to those in this country who may be someday called upon to defend their hearths and homes, yet whose military instruction is confined to the merest outline of the science of fighting. Bravery in the field of battle is the proud heritage of Englan d's sons, but if ever the time comes when their power is put to the test, careful study of the world's great battles will prove a serviceable companion with which no amount of pluck or endurance can afford to dispense. The volume under review is the result of much thought, and it may be assumed no less experience, and it should be found in the library of every student of war who seeks to qualify in the chamber for great events in the field. men in such circumstances cannot be otherwise than pregnant the field.

THE CENTURY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

The Century for December fully maintains the high standard of excellence which characterised the first issue under the new management. This magazine is second to none of its contemporaries; in this, as in many other instances, Yankee caterers and enterprise stand forth conspicuous.

BOOKS FOR REVIEW .- "Persia As It Is." By C. J. Wills, M.D. (Sampson Low, Marston and Co.); "The Century Magazine." Fisher Unwin.)

THE Secunderabad paper learns that the 2nd Battalion.Middle-sex Regiment is making remarkable scores during its present annual course. It has always been known as one of the best shooting regiments in the British service, but this year it bids fair to far surpass anything that it has before achieved. For instance, G Company, which has just finished its annual course in individual firing, has made the remarkable average of 172.69, that is 2.69 points over and above the number required to qualify as marksman all round.

CAPTAIN FEEL, Royal Engineers, proceeds to Mooltan as Executive Engineer, Military Works, relieving Captain Chippendall, who reverts to the Home Establishment. From what the Lahore paper can hear, very few Royal Engineer officers are electing for continuous Indian service. The Government will have to bring out a more attractive scheme before they can secure anything like the number of officers they require.

LORD DUFFERIN AND HIS CRITICS.

"To the historian all men are dead." This splendid aphorism of the late Sir John Kaye is being considerably acted upon by the critics of the present time-some of whom delight to follow the example of the one in the Greek mythology who thought that an offering of all the faults he could discover in his here was the one most acceptable to the gods. A critic, writing to the Times of Saturday last, is not exactly one of these; but he takes care to impress upon his readers that "somehow or other" the popularity of the present Viceroy of India is on the wane, and that his Government is drifting out of touch and sympathy with the people. Lord Dufferin has just been two years in his present office, and it might be thought that this period is rather too short, a time in which to form a calm and faithful judgment on his administration. But the critic thinks otherwise, and he gives a sketch of Lord Dufferin's stewardship of India so far as it has gone, which sketch the Times commends to the perusal of all its readers interested in that country. The sketch is not an unfair one, and credit is given to the Viceroy for acting up to the declaration which he made on first setting foot upon Indian soil. "Whatever criticism," he then said, "may be justly passed on my future administration, it shall be in the power of no man to allege that either from fear or favour, or any personal consideration, I have turned aside from whatever course was most conducive to the happiness of the millions entrusted to my care, or to the dignity, honour, and safety of this mighty Empire." These were brave words, but the critic will have it that although the speaker of them has not swerved from their import, yet the millions he referred to regard him, if not with dislike, with distrust. He owns that the real grievances of India are few-that the Government is fair and just, and the taxation not excessive. But he writes that the country is drifting into a critical state :-

The popularity of a Viceroy matters little when he is a man of strong will, with an intense sense of duty and a keen perception of what is best for the country. Such men—and Lord Dufferin is one of them prove the truth of the Latin adage possunt quia posse videntur. But when the whole Government is out of sympathy with those it governs it is time to diagnose the disease, and find its cause and its cure. The cause is a complex one, but over-education has a good deal to do with it. Technical education has been neglected and literary education has been overdone. The industrial arts are despised. There are not a hundred students in the single engineering school on this side of India, but over 2,000 young gentlemen matriculated this year at the University. When Lord Ripon left the country an attempt was made to commemorate his rule by a technical college, but the subscriptions were paltry, and the plan remains on paper. In fact, the Natives, or, at any rate, the higher castes, will not work with their hands and only eare for literary teaching. Thus a large, discontented, over-educated, or wrongly-educated class has been created who throng the doors of Government offices eager for public employment. At the same time they give their importunity an air of patriotism, and say they only claim a share in the management of their own national concerns.

This is no doubt true, but why the popularity of Lord Dufferin should suffer it is not easy to understand. According to the critic "the benignant rule of Lord Ripon raised hopes in the minds of the educated Hindoos" which have not been fulfilled. But would they have been fulfilled under the rule of Lord Ripon? Even the admirer of the benignant sway of that nobleman is forced to admit that although his lordship "awakened aspirations in a people quite unfit for self-rule" he never intended to help in carrying them out. "He was very far from admitting that the Natives of India were either ready for or had any inherent right to a share in the Imperial Government." Why, then, it might be asked, did he awaken the aspirations? But we have yet to be convinced that the peoples of India have such aspirations. Those who pretend they have and proclaim such in the Native Press bear as much proportion to the toiling millions of India as the three tailors of Tooley-street did to the people of England. Certain Babus who aspire to municipal offices advocate local self-government, but where it has been granted the experiment has hardly proved a success. What the toiling millions of India want is wise and honest governing-even-handed justice, and the improvements in their condition which will come from increased railway extension and greater facilities to develop industry and bring labour better rewards. If these aims be steadily followed we shall in time hear less and less of the mutterings of discontent, and the agitators who are at present too proud to work, but not ashamed to beg for official crumbs, will have to take to some more profitable if less pleasant employment than writing or talking sedition. We believe as little in the cry of the masses of India for self-Government as we do in the cry of the masses of Ireland for Home Rule. That there is much yet to be done in order to get at and hold the sympathies of the peoples of India is a truism belonging to that complex problem of British rule in India which it is the proud prerogative of Englishmen to solve. But if it be true, as the critic in the Times avers, that "the real reason of the waning popularity of the present Viceroy is that he will not be in a hurry," it is a high compliment to Lord Dufferin's sagacity, and a proof of his fitness for the great and responsible office which he holds.

OBITUARY.

SIR DOUGLAS FORSYTH.

The sudden and unexpected death of Sir Douglas Forsyth must have cast a gloom over many circles in which he was known and regarded with esteem. There will, of course, be differences of opinions regarding certain parts of his career in India-such as the part he played during what is known as the Kuka rebellion -and the part he played as the British representative in There are critics who will still, perhaps, touch the story of those times with no gentle hand, but even after all has been said by those who will extenuate nothing, there will remain in the minds of many Anglo-Indians only kindly memoirs of the man who had to take occasion by the hand and act as his judgment prompted him. For doing this he received the extremes of praise and blame-but he must be credited with having in more than one instance of his life shown, as his biographer in the Times says, "some of the best qualities of the English character." His early death will be mourned by many friends.

The Times says :--

Sir Douglas Forsyth, was the younger son, the elder being Mr. William Forsyth, Q.C., of the late Mr. Thomas Forsyth of Liverpool, and he was born in 1827. He was first educated at Rugby, pool, and he was born in 1827. He was first educated at Rugby, and then went through the usual course at Haileybury before entering the Bengal Civil Service, which he did in 1848. He entered the service at an exciting moment, when the final conquest of the Punjab was in progress, and on the eve of the formation of the junior division of the Civil Service, which has now appropriated so much of the fame and position that formerly belonged to the through the service of longed to the three Presidencies. At a very early stage of his career he was sent to this new province, the organisation of which Lord Dalhousie intrusted to the ablest men at his disposal, and when the mutiny broke out nine years after his arrival he was acting as Deputy Commissioner in the Cis Sutlej States—his superior, or Deputy Commissioner in the Cis Sutley States—his superior, or the full Commissioner, being Mr. George Barnes. The principal duty that devolved upon these officials was to provide means of transport for the troops ordered from the Punjab to Delhi, but on their tact and firmness also depended to a great extent the attitude of the protected Sikh States. Mr. Forsyth took a bold initiative in calling upon the Maharajah of Puttials for assistance, and the appeal, being promptly responded to by that loyal chieftain, awakened a responsive echo in the other Sikh chiefs of Jheend and Nabha. His measures for the defence of Umballa, were prompt and sufficient. He raised a police force of Sikhs for the purpose, and under the direction of the Commissioner, Mr. George Barnes, it was he who provided for the security of the road from Umballa to Kurnaul up to the siege and capture of Delhi. The reputation he gained during the mutiny (and for his services he received the C.B.) insured his rapid promotion, until he became in due course Commissioner of the very important district of Umballa. But in 1869 a still more important subject than the management of the Sikhs had come to the front, and that was our future relations with Russia. Lord Mayo had just received the Ameer Shere Ali in durbar at Umballa, and as it was considered desirable to bring the views of the Indian Government on the Central Asian question in a clear and unmistakable form before that of and the appeal, being promptly responded to by that loyal chief-Asian question in a clear and unmistakable form before that of St. Petersburg, Mr. Forsyth was considered the most competent person to be intrusted with the responsible duty of Indian envoy to the Russian Court. There can be no doubt he fully justified the confidence thus reposed in him, as he established the very basis of the arrangement which, despite the rapid progress of Russian arms in the interval, was carried out in the agreement two years ago to delimit the Afghan frontier by a joint Commission with the second seco The main point which he then established was that Russia consented to respect the territory then in the possession of Shere Ali, and it will be found during the coming negotiations with Russia that we have not advanced much beyond this stage at the present moment.

Immediately after his return to India Mr. Forsyth was intrusted with a second mission, more interesting in its surroundings if less important in its consequences than his visit to St. Petersburg. The travels of Mr. Shaw had introduced to us the little-known country of Chinese or Eastern Turkestan and its famons ruler, the Atalik Ghazi, or Yakoob Beg. An envoy from this potentate visited India, and Mr. Forsyth was sent on a return mission to Yarkand. Unfortunately, Yakoob Beg was engaged in a distant campaign, and Mr. Forsyth, whose instructions required his return to India before the commencement of winter, had to return without accomplishing the main object of his journey. The only satisfactory result of the mission was that he learnt something definite about a State which at the time was neither Russian nor Chinese. Three years later Mr. Forsyth was sent on a second mission to Kashgar, not merely that he might complete his observations of the earlier date, but also that he might acquire a precise knowledge of what the future relations of Russia with this State would be, for at that moment Kashgar, not less than Khiva, stood under the menace of Russian invasion. At all events, he was successful in seeing the Atalik Ghazi on this occasion, and he visited both Yarkand and Kashgar. His report on the mission forms a most useful guide to the politics, natural history, and physical condition of Eastern Turkestan. For this mission he was rewarded with the K.C.S.I. His diplomatic work did not end here, for in 1875 he went to Burma, chiefly to obtain an explanation of the King's reception of Lisitai and to effect a settlement of the Karennee question. This mission was denounced as a failure, and Sir Douglas Forsyth came in for some unfriendly criticism; but, as it would require considerable space to go into the rights and wrongs of the question, it must be sufficient to say that Sir Douglas printed for private circulation a succinct and really unanswerable account of his conduct during his journey to Burma and of the proper execution of his mission. Shortly after this he retired from the service, and since his return to England he has taken a prominent and active part as director of several of the larger Indian railways.

BURMA SKETCHES-A NIGHT ALARM.

The conduct of a force on the occasion of a night alarm is now occupying the minds of our military experts. Papers on this important subject have lately been translated from the Russian by that enthusiastic soldier and model staff officer, General Bengough, and we may shortly expect more definite orders to be laid down in the Queen's Regulations as to the procedure to be adopted on these critical occasions. It was my good fortune to be once present at a night alarm, and as a donator of mirth and merriment, it to my mind bears the palm from all the travelling sights or shows it has been my lot to witness. The deep impression it has left on my memory nothing but annihilation can efface. We were a mixed force and had occupied a village without opposition. Having taken up our quarters in a commodious Poonghy Kyoung, shut off from the village by a cactus hedge and ditch on one side and protected on the other by a large tank, the usual precautions and dispositions of sentries were taken at sun-down. Our commander, was a careful and intelligent officer, and fully realised that the safety of the men was in his keeping. Camp fires commenced to glow on the promontories, and indentations of the lake, the braying of the mules, and the hum of voices rose on the night air, and Tommy Atkins' aquatic performances had ceased to trouble the placid waters. Peace, comfort and goodwill reigned round the grotesque temples and wooden pagodas where we lay for the night. A plentiful supply of fresh meat had been obtained, and with our Commissariat rations, supplemented by a lot of brandy, we managed to make a merry repast, congratulating ourselves on the prospect of a quiet night. Most of us had divested ourselves of our service kit and were revelling in the luxury of pyjamas, either being lulled to slumber by the monotonous chant of the Tuktoo lizard, or lazily smoking the pipe of peace to the last strains of Tommy's song:—

"When in this campaign
We'll keep it rolling with the song, boys."

The cubic space allotted to us was limited. Five officers with their bedding, revolvers and swords filled it tightly. An individual in the centre moving without premonitory warning was apt to fall foul of his neighbours, and many were the groans and mutual recriminations we were nightly accustomed to. "Keep your toes out of that, old fellow!" "Confound your revolver!" "Do keep still, Brown; you've knocked over my water bottle!" Most of us, however, were young, sound sleepers, and good-natured moreover. So the ups- and-downs of campaigning were rather an amusement than otherwise. On the night in question, the most dyspeptic amongst us had dosed off, when suddenly out of the still darkness, "Bang," "Bang," then a sharp volley, and most of us were struggling for our garments. Where, alas! was that precious pair of overalls; where those boots; in that entanglement of human forms seething and writhing like so many worms. Smothered oaths when wrong boots are hurled back on the mass of humanity, or a brawny stripling of six feet tackles our light weights' inexpressibles. Oh! the agony, as we tumble shoeless out of the Kyoung on to the sharp pebbles. A fiendish yell as if ten thousand devils were let loose now pierces the darkness and penetrates to the very marrow. Seizing the first weapon to hand determined to sell our lives as dearly as possible, we dash on in the direction of our men. All is in the greatest confusion. Where is the enemy? No one seems to know. At last we learn that a smart sentry had fired at his own shadow 'the rest followed suit, and the domons proved to be the camp followers yelling in chorus. Order is shortly restored, and we retire to our dens and again court sleep. Our slumbers, however, are once more ruthlessly interrupted. This time the officer whose duty it was to inspect the sentries was going his rounds. The guard when ordered to turn out, instead of complying in the ordinary sleepy regulation manner rushed forth with a wild cheer. The result was a look-out man on the top, of the building excitement. A trumpeter, who was sleeping close by, woke up suddenly, seized his trumpet, blew the alarm, and fell down in a fainting fit, and the sentries loosed off all round. When this disturbance had also quieted down, the night being far spent, our commanding officer rose in his Kyoung and appealed to our feelings in the following words:—"Are we to have no rest? Is night to be made hideous by these disgraceful scenes, these abominable exhibitions of cowardice? Call yourselves soldiers and men? An old woman would show more self-control. But by——if you men cannot show fortitude, I can enforce discipline, and by——and so help me, the next man . . . but here the commination service was drowned by the cracking of rifles. In the grey dawn obsequious staff officers were seen running to and fro, note - book in hand, taking down the names of the delinquents. We were, however, not to be drawn this time, for our nerves were now thoroughly alarm-proof.

The destruction of human life in India by wild animals is one of those facts that people in England are prone to misconstrue. It is forgotten that while the number of deaths is very large, the ratio to the population is very small—not larger than the percentage of people at home who die from street accidents. The subject is one, however, of special interest because of the preventible nature of a large proportion of the deaths. In 1885, the total number of persons killed amounted to 22,907, and of cattle to 59,029. Of the former 2,765 were killed by wild animals, and 20,142 by snakes, the largest number of deaths occurring in the Lower Provinces of Bengal and in the North-West Provinces and Oudh. Fifty-one persons were killed by elephants, 838 by tigers, 244 by leopards, 99 by bears, 248 by wolves, 26 by jackals, and 250 by other animals. In Bombay no fewer than 24 persons are said to have been killed by mad dogs, seven by lizards, five by scorpions, and one by a mad camel. Of the cattle 154 were killed by elephants, chiefly in Coorg, 24,964 by tigers, 21,504 by leopards, 380 by bears, 6,635 by wolves, 2,130 by hyenas, and 1,483 by snakes. The total amount paid for the destruction of these pests was Rs. 234,136 as against Rs. 246,525 in the previous year. Of the former sum Rs. 54,799 was paid for the destruction of tigers, Rs. 100,338 for that of leopards, Rs. 9,585 for bears, Rs. 21,235 for wolves, Rs. 8,900 for hyenas, and Rs. 4,054 for other animals, while Rs. 25,212 was paid for the destruction of 420.044 Rs. 21,235 for wolves, Rs. 8,900 for hyenas, and Rs. 4,054 for other As. 21,235 for wolves, Ks. 8,900 for hyenas, and Ks. 4,054 for other animals, while Rs. 25,212 was paid for the destruction of 420,044 snakes. It is very doubtful whether the returns of cattle are even approximately correct, as many of the largest grazing grounds, where the tigers and leopards do most mischief, are many miles from any police station where the deaths would have to be reported, and the graziers do not care to leave their cattle for the purpose of reporting their losses. The complaint has been general for some years in the Native Press that the enforcement general for some years in the Native Press that the enforcement of the Arms Act has prevented the Natives from protecting themselves or their cattle against the ravages of wild beasts. But though returns were called for last year as to the number of licenses granted under the Act for such purposes, but very little information has been actually furnished. No figures are forthcoming from either Bombay or the North-West Provinces and Oudh, while in Madras the number of licenses was 3,839, in Bengal 18116 in Burne 602 in Access 0.662 and in the Burney 602 in Access 0.662 and in the Burney 602 in Access 0.662 and in the Burney 602 in Access 0.663 and in the Burney 602 in Acc 18,116, in Burma 693, in Assam 9,663, and in the Punjab 12,233. It is generally considered that the want of success in the destrution of snakes is greatly attributable to the apathy and inaction of the people, and district officers and members of district boards might do a great deal of good if they would impress upon the people the necessity of taking more active measures.—Englishman.

Tussus Silk.—It seems that extensive exports of raw tussus is the Europe for members has raised its price throughout silk to Europe for manufacture has raised its price throughout Chota Nagpore division, and has seriously affected tussur-silk-weaving industry. In Maunbhoom many silk-weavers have taken to weaving cotton cloth, for which a demand is said to be reto weaving cotton cloth, for which a demand is said to be reviving on account of an increasing dislike to European piece goods. In Maunbhoom export of tussur cocoons received a remarkable impetus during last year owing to operations upon a very liberal scale by a French firm, that has been buying for export to Europe. In a trade of limited dimensions this has naturally exercised a marked effect upon exportation, and doubtless will tend to stimulate cultivators. Who may now see a new naturally exercised a marked effect upon exportation, and unoutless will tend to stimulate cultivators, who may now see a new field opening to their enterprise. It is reported from Maunbhoom that importation of European piece goods is beginning to decline on account of a growing preference for country cloth. But statistics of imports furnished by the East Indian Railway do not support a statement that there has been any decrease in imports of European piece goods. In respect to both tussur and cotton piece goods, there must, sooner or later, be a great revival. Manchester, heavily as she is endeavouring to weight India, must ere chester, heavily as she is endeavouring to weight India, must ere long feel the pressure of Indian competition. With our own silk manufactures—cocoon nurseries—and cotton plantations brought under organised arrangement, we should starve Manchester out of competition. When this once comes about, we shall not care for any demand made upon Indian resources by British importers, nor could they hope to counteract the strong efforts now being made in India to supply our markets from our own looms. Manchester must not suppose she can insist upon India growing her raw material for her, that she may manufacture it into fabrics and return it to India for a lucrative market. This state of

has not only plenty of money and enterprise, but she has men and machinery to manufacture her own raw material for her own markets to meet her own demand, and it must be seen and felt that a culminating point is looming before her, at which she will not only grow her own raw material, but manufacture it for her own markets, despite erratic legislation that kills Native industry and stifles local energy. Nobody objects to export—we rather approve of it, when legitimately pursued; but if by its means a hope is cherished of underselling Indian industries by first buying up all available raw material, this hope will not be realised for very long. With steam mills and improved machinery, India and Bengal will, and must in time, be independent of extraneous help and a vaunted patronage that neither need have courted, and can now easily dispense with by combined effort. With India true to herself, she can laugh at a speculation that desires to purchase what she produces to return it to her in a different form, and thus make money out of her both ways.

Calcutta cannot well be entirely dispassionate in its estimates of any transaction in which the name of Simla occurs, and when the Englishman and the Pioneer take to fighting over the Government loan of a lakh and three-quarters for the Simla Town Hall we must expect somebody to get a little angry. Allahabad charges Calcutta with uttering "arrant nonsense;" Calcutta retorts with an insinuation about "bad langwidge" and "the concentrated essence of Colney Hatch and Bedlam." All this is very sad and a little silly, yet it prepares us for the Englishman's closing conviction that "certainly nothing more calculated to affect the reputation of the Government has occurred during the two years of Lord Dufferin's administration than" this wicked little loan. We are afraid that the severity of this judgment is very greatly due to the fact that it has to do with Simla. There will be dances and theatricals in the place, and Calcutta sees in the help that the Government have given towards the building of it one more token of that Capuan policy against which every stoic broiling nobly in the plains thinks he is bound to protest. We cannot quite regard it in that light, and are shameless enough to regard it as something much shorter of indecency than it appears to the Englishman. Our own objection to the loan is that the Government should find it so easy to lend a lakh and three-quarters to the Municipality of a little Punjab town for a mere work of convenience, while they are unable to guarantee the Municipality of Bombay a crore and a quarter for a great work of sanitary necessity. We cannot quite make the favour shown to the Simla Municipality fit in with the Viceroy's declaration at Bombay a fortnight to-day, when he explained that the Government of India could not help us without abandoning the financial policy which they had adopted after very grave deliberation. An apologist for the Government has, indeed, explained this week that the loan does not add a farthing, directly or indirectly, to Government expenditure, and

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

... The best service which I over rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athense im Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

"VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthly (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and consorvative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to fournalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs. Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

BROAD A ARROW

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of flustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its corre-pondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and **Colonian**

ments."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette' circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.
